U. S. Department of Agriculture,
Weather Bureau.
Toledo, O., June 4, 1892.

The area of high pressure is central over the New England states and has caused decidedly cooler weather over that section and the lake region. The storm mentioned Friday in the southwest has remained nearly stationary, and is central over southern Colorado. The movement of this storm is uncertain, but it will probably cause a rise in temperature and showers by Monday.

The weather over the northern the country is generally cloudy or rainy; in the southern half it is fair. The temperature has fallen in the west and northwest and over the New England states, elsewhere it has risen slightly or remained stationary.

The Mississippi river continues to rise and New Orleans reports 17.3 feet, the highest on record.

Forecast for Toledo and vicinity—For 36 hours—Showers, slight change in temperature.

E. A. HANNER, Observer.

Ohio—Generally fair, easterly winds; fair Sunday.

Indiana and lower Michigan—Slightly warmer; southeasterly winds and generally fair.

Dont be deceived by dealers who "cut" prices. "Cutting" prices leads to "cutting" goods. For this reason and to protect the public, the genuine medicines of Dr. R. V. Pierce, are now sold only through regularly authorized agents, who can sell only at the following long-established prices: Golden Medical Discovery, $1.00 per bottle. Favorite Prescription, $1.00 per bottle. Pleasant Pellets, 25 cents per vial.

The genuine medicines, which can be had only at these prices, are the cheapest you can use, for they're guaranteed. It's "value received or no pay." In every case where Dr. Pierce's medicines fail to give satisfaction, the makers will return the money. But, they want to be sure that you get their medicines, and not their bottles refilled or tampered with, or spurious imitations.

Refuse everything offered as Dr. Pierce's medicines at less than the above prices. They are generally spurious.

Terrible Explosion at Kensington.

A House Demolished, Two Persons Killed and a Number Injured.

Pittsburg, June 4.—A terrific explosion occurred about 1 o'clock this morning at Kensington, 14 miles from Pittsburg, up the Allegheny river.

Two people were instantly killed and another fatally injured.

The explosion occurred in the jewelry store of J. K. Turner, on Fourth avenue. The building was completely wrecked and then caught fire.

Miss Sheppler, of Emlenton, Pa., who occupied a room in the building, was instantly killed.

Mrs. Sarah Wilson, occupant of another room, was fatally injured.

J. K. Turner, jeweler, was blown through the roof to the top of a three-story building adjoining, and his mangled body dangled over the edge of the roof until the building burned down.

Both buildings were quickly destroyed by the fire which followed the explosion. It is thought to have been caused by nitro-glycerine.

WHITE-CAPPED IN TIPTON.

Young Man Dragged from Bed and Whipped.

Tipton, Ind., June 4.—The second case of white-capping has occurred at Sharpsville.

Alfred Midkiff, a young man 20 years of age, was the victim. It seems that he has been boarding with Mrs. Jarrett for some time, in whose house was also a widow. Reports had been circulated for some time that Midkiff and the lady had been too intimate to suit the staid citizens of that place, and on several occasions Mrs. Jarrett was notified not to harbor Midkiff as a boarder or there would be trouble. The woman, however, paid no attention to the threats.

About 10 o'clock at night several men with white masks over their faces, entered the house and pulled Midkiff from bed, blindfolded, "bucked and gagged" him, and led him to a tree. Then they securely tied him and began to "lay on Macduff." The men used heavy willow switches, and at every lick the skin was terribly cut and bruised. He was then released, and in a few hours he was able to crawl back to the house.

Young Midkiff went to Tipton to consult with Prosecutor Smith. He says that when the men entered the house, and before they could extinguish the light, he had recognized three or four of them, whom he says are citizens of Sharpsville. He will not divulge their names at present, but says he will do so when the proper time arrives.

NO WORD FROM JIM

Uutil After the Nomination is Made.

Such is the Statement of Clarkson.

The Battle of the Giants is Now On,

And the Political Fur is Flying.

Blaine Men Cheerful and Harrison Men Confident—All the Gossip and Incidents from Minneapolis.

Minneapolis, June 4.—Friends of President Harrison, such of the delegates on the ground who were selected in his interest and who retired last night serene in the belief that another day would dispose of what little has been manifested of the Blaine movement, awoke this morning in the flesh.

They also awoke in the spirit to realize that "politics are mighty uncertain." Less than twelve hours ago they were certain that the Blaie movement would collapse, if not from inherent weakness, then certainly from generally accepted conclusion, based upon his own statements, that the secretary of state could not and would not again undertake the labor and responsibility or undergo the excitement incidental to the position of chief standard bearer of the republican party in a presidential campaign.

This morning, however, they were brought face to face with half a dozen statements, all more or less authoritative, couched in different language, all more or less problematical in their general tenor, but all pointing in the same direction and to the same idea that Blaine, if not an avowed candidate for the nomination as against his chief, is at least prepared to accept it in the event of its being tendered him by the convention.

This is all that Clarkson and his friends have claimed from the start. It is precisely what the supporters of the administration have just as industriously denied and it is all that is needed to enable the Blaine forces to recover from the temporary depression of yesterday and to give them cheer and inspiration for the battle of next week.

The people who for the past couple of days have been insisting that Clarkson has known all along precisely where he stood are saying this morning: "I told you so," with great unanimity and exceeding good-will.

Many of the Harrison people, however, are not willing to admit that the situation has changed or that the prospects of the president have weakened since the sun went down last night.

The men to whom the latest statements regarding Blaine's intentions are attributed are, they say, no more entitled to be regarded as semi-official mouthpieces than the men who have made themselves the sponsors for similar statements for a month past and whose declarations, now that the convention is approaching, are regarded as of no more weight than those of any private in the ranks.

No matter what Father Cronin or Congressman Boutelle may think or say; no matter what family telegrams may have passed between Washington and Emmons Blaine at Chicago, and no matter what deductions may be drawn from such opinions and such telegrams, the fact remains, they hold, that until Mr. Blaine comes squarely out and either declares himself a candidate or places himself in the hands of his friends and announces as much, the convention, in choosing its standard bearer, must be governed by his February letter to Clarkson.

That letter, they maintain, is still very much in evidence and it must be withdrawn or qualified as a condition precedent to the naming of its writer in the national convention.

Mr. Clarkson, however, is pleased with the situation. Speaking of Mr. Blaine's statement that he would write no more letters he said: "I think it will nominate him."

In answer to a question he said: "I don't suppose that Mr. Blaine will be formally placed in nomination, but I cannot tell."

Mr. Clarkson said that it is still possible that some of the delegations would put forward favorite sons.

ANTE-CONVENTION PROMISES.

They Cut no Figure in the Republican Party.

Minneapolis, June 4.—There are several stories afloat about the plans of the Blaine men. It is said they will not put Mr. Blaine in nomination for fear the Harrison men will lay his letter to Clarkson before the convention. Instead of putting his name forward they will perfect an understanding with the delegations to cast their ballots for him.

Mr. Blaine's friends are assuring the instructed delegates that the instructions were given at a time when Mr. Blaine was not considered a possibility, and that the changed conditions warrant them in exercising their own judgment.

Another plan discussed by the anti-Harrison people is to put Blaine formally before the convention and split the vote of the delegates, leaving the balance of power in the hands of some one like Alger to whom the anti-Harrison men could turn from Mr. Blaine.

But the feeling that there is more pro-Blaine than anti-Harrison sentiment in the convention, makes this plan seem weak to many of Mr. Harrison's enemies.

BLAINE AND THE CATHOLICS.

Father Cronin Says the Secretary Will Accept.

Minneapolis, June 4.—Powell Clayton, the national committeeman from Arkansas, says: "I think it is not safe to nominate Blaine. I have always been a Blaine man. I believe he meant every word he said when he wrote that letter. We know he said he would not accept, but there is not a man who will say he has declared he would take it." If the Washington correspondent of the St. Paul Globe is telling the truth though, there is such a man.

A special to the Globe from Washington, published this morning, says: "Father Cronin, editor of the Catholic Union, of Buffalo, had an extended conference with Secretary Blaine this evening. He came here upon the latter's invitation. At the conclusion of the conference he said:

"'Blaine will accept the nomination beyond a doubt. His mind is positively made up. There is only one thing which gives him uneasiness. It is whether he ought to resign his seat in the cabinet.

"'Mrs. Blaine has had a great deal to do with his determination to accept. She and he are confident that his health is strong enough for him to make the contest. He will not only accept the nomination—he fully expects to receive it.

"'He sent for me fearing that his letter to Father Ducey might be the means of alienating the Roman Catholic vote and wanting my opinion.

"'I told him that the republican Catholics would not be influenced by the letter, nor will they. The real reason he refused to accept the nomination four years ago was because he feared that the republican party would surely suffer defeat. He does not think so now. He believes the democrats will nominate Cleveland and he feels sure that he can defeat him or any other candidate the democrats may select.'"

AFTER EMMONS.

Reportorial Pumps Working With Little Success.

Chicago, June 4.—All the morning papers printed a story this morning that Emmons Blaine had received a telegram from his mother saying that his father would accept the presidential nomination.

Emmons was seen at the McCormick residence, No. 135 Rush street, early this morning.

"I've received no such telegram from my mother or anyone else," he said, "and I do not know anything as to my father's position regarding the nomination. I have had no word concerning the matter from either my father or mother and I do not think I shall have."

FILLEY VIOLATES HIS TRUST.

He Says He Will Not be Governed by Convention Pledges.

Minneapolis, June 4.—Chauncey I. Filley, the national committeeman, and delegate-at-large from Missouri, made another lightning change last night. When he reached Minneapolis the Harrison sentiment seemed very strong.

Mr. Filley immediately announced that under instructions from the Missouri convention he would vote for Harrison.

Last night the Blaine boom received a lively impetus and this mroning Mr. Filley is going to vote for Blaine in spite of his instructions.

"When instructions were given for Harrison," he said, "they were given under the impression that Blaine would not accept the nomination. There were 137 officeholders in our convention who instructed us for Harison, but Blaine is the choice of the people of Missouri."

Mr. Filley adds that all of the district delegates from his state will vote for Blaine.

OUR OWN FORAKER.

His Usual Brass Band Tactics Put Into Use—Depew Arrives.

Minneapolis, June 4.—At an early hour the trains from the east began to pour in reinforcements to the camps of both parties, from Ohio, New York, Kentucky and other states. Gov. Foraker, of Ohio, was one of the early arrivals at the West.

"Blaine does not need to write another letter," he said. "He has already declared himself sufficiently and his interests are in the hands of his friends. He will be the nominee of the convention. At present the Ohio delegation is divided, but it is likely to fall into line before the final ballot for the candidate who develops the greatest strength."

Chauncey Depew, with his perennial smile, hustled in all alone and reached the counter to register his name close behind that of the ex-governor of Ohio. Having done this, he hastened upstairs with an intimation that he would be prepared to talk after breakfast. He stopped long enough to say: "The other people have brass bands but we have the votes."

Chairman Henry C. Payne, of the Wisconsin state committee, expressed the opinion this morning that Harrison was losing ground.

"I am not prepared to say, however," he added, "that the Blaine men are making any material gains. The balance of power seems to rest with the Alger element and I should not be surprised if Alger proves an important factor in the final outcome."

The Michigan men now here cliam that Alger has 80 votes in sight.

Senators Teller and Wolcott, of Colorado, came in on the heels of Depew in tow of C. Clark Wheeler, the journalistic free silver champion of Aspen, add a delegate from the fourth district. The bulk of the Colorado delegation will not be in until Sunday. "Then they will come," says Mr. Wheeler, "with but one object, that of finding some one to beat Harrison, whether that is Blaine or any one else. They favor Alger for second place only. After Blaine they are more friendly to Gresham than to any one else."

John Brennan, one of the most prominent Irish orators and poets in the country has written a letter under date of May 28 from San Francisco to E. R. Kirk, of Sioux City, Ia., in which he says: "I am hoping for Harrison's nomination. To nominate Blaine would be a great mistake. Harrison 's stronger than in 1888."

Mr. Kirk explains that the significance and value of Brennan's letter lies in the fact that he is one of Secretary Blaine's warmest and most enthusiastic friends, who takes him at his word to Chairman Clarkson in his letter of February 6, and believes, as he writes that to nominate Blaine under the conditions, "would be a mistake."

Ex-Representative Wallace, of Brooklyn, came in this morning from Duluth. "I was elected as an anti-H'arrison man," he said, "but I do not believe in 'any one to beat Harrison.' I am for Blaine and I think 50 of the New York delegation are for him."

Mr. Wallace sa'd that he understood that Gov. McKinley of Ohio was to be the permanent chairman of the convention. Gov. McKinley will be here Sunday. He is the Harrison candidate for the permanent chairmanship. The anti-Harrison men have not decided yet whether they will up any one against him.

George Baldwin, of Canton, who arrived this morning, brought a message from Mr. McKinley. The governor sends greeting to the Harr'son men and says he will be here to-morrow to take up the fight for Harrison. He says that two-thirds of the Ohio delegation is for the president's nomination. Unless some change is made in the plans of the Blaine men their leaders's name will not be presented formally.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Her Delegates Are for Harrison to the End.

Minneapolis, June 4.—J. C. Hart, delegate-at-large from West Virginia, says the district delegates from his state, who were elected for Harrison, are still for him.

West Virginia was for Blaine in 1884 and again in 1888. This year he says the people of his state have taken Mr. Blaine's letter as final and they are for Harrison.

Mr. Hart directs attention to the fact that though West V'rginia is a southern state there is not a federal office holder in the delegation.

INTO THE BLAINE WAGON.

Murat Halstead Will Surely Prove to be a Jonah.

Chicago, June 4.—Murat Halstead got into the Blaine bandwagon this morning. He was captured by Gen. Bushnell, of Ohio, and introduced to the Blaine boomers. This morning he declared that he believed Blaine was all right and would probably win out.

Joe Manley, postmaster at Augusta, Me., and Blaine's confidential friend, arrived this morning but positively refused to be interviewed.

Mr. Charles F. Libbey, from Tom Reed's district, said, however, that Mr. dispatches from Mr. Blainemfwpyhrldur Manley had told him he had no letters or dispatches from Mr. Blaine, and that he was in the dark as to the secretary's intentions. Mr. Manley left at 11 o'clock for Minneapolis

EBBS AND FLOWS.

First it is Blaine and Then it is Harrison.

Minneapolis, June 4.—Senator Hansbrough is the authority for this statement. The Blaine boom was checked a little by the denial of the "papa" telegram made by Emmons Blaine at Chicago this morning, but it received a fresh impetus when dispatches were received from the Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire delegations, saying that only three of the delegates from those states would vote for Harrison. Telegrams were received from Chicago saying that the Chicago members of the Illinois delegation had agreed to vote for Blaine.

Senator Quay was an early riser this morning. After breakfast he went to the headquarters of the national committee and was with Mr. Clarkson when Mr. Platt arrived and joined them. The anti-administration forces were swelled further by the arrival of Senators Teller, Wolcott and Shoup.

There was no lack of confidence among Mr. Harrison's supporters. They say they have no fear of the result. They rely largely on the effect of some statements which are to be made to the convention in the speeches seconding the nomination of Harrison.

The explanation in the delay of naming the temporary officers is that the preliminary discussion of the cases of the contesting delegations would occupy all the time to-day.

Gen. James W. Husted, of Weschester county, N. Y., who came here with Hon. Chauncey M. Depew this morning, is reported to be quite ill. He was taken sick in Chicago Thursday and on the train last night was in much pain, but suffered in silence. This morning he promised Mr. Depew to go to bed, but failed to do so. While mixing with the crowd in the lobby he was again attacked and was taken to a room for treatment. He is not dangerously ill, and will doubtless be all right after a rest of a day or two.

CLARKSON ON THE INSIDE.

He is the Boss Blaine Man at the Scene of Battle.

Chicago, June 4.—The Tribune this morning prints the following dispatch from Minneapolis:

The certainty that Mr. Blaine may be considered the candidate of the party has been established. A message was received by Chairman Clarkson which brought the highest personal assurance that the secretary of state would write no letter and send no dispatch between now and the convention. The statement is made absolutely and authoritatively in order to put the stamp of denial on the rumors which the Harrison people set afloat in order to befog the delegates.

Further than this Chairman Clarkson received the word that the nomination of Blaine which would reflect the will of the republican party, would be declined by him.

The statement is made on absolute knowledge. It settles once and for all the uncertainty in which many of the secretary's friends found themselves involved. It was not given general circulation to-day because the leaders who want Mr. Blaine as the candidate of the party thought it just as well to let the administration do some more talking. But the Tribune is able to vouch for the authenticity of this information.

When Mr. Clarkson received the message this morning he called in consultation Senator Quay, Committeemen J. Sloat Fassett, Henry C. Payne, Senator Hansbrough, and two or three others, members of the national committee. The news was imparted to them in confidence for their own guidance. With it before them they felt justified in assuring the men who were seeking light and who will have votes in the convention that they could now go ahead and nominate Mr. Blaine.

It may be further stated that Secretary Jerry Rusk is a candidate for vice president.

BRUCE AND PINCHBACK.

Two Southern Gentlemen Arrive on the Scene.

Minneapolis, June 4.—ExSenator Palmer, of Michigan, who is the leader of the Harrison forces from his state, arrived last night and was about the lobby of the West this morning. When asked about the outlook he said: "It is confusing. You cannot tell anything from the present indications."

Mr. Palmer looked very much disgusted when the Emmons Blaine canard of last night was mentioned. "Wasn't it ridiculous?"

The southern contingent received three important accessions during the morning in the persons of ex-Register of the Treasury B. K. Bruce, of Mississippi; William Youngblood, of Alabama, and P. B. S. Pinchback, of Louisiana, the two later being national committeemen from their respective states.

None of the trio are delegates, but nevertheless they will exercise a strong influence in favor of their candidates. Bruce is naturally a supporter of the administration and so is Pinchback, who will also assist the Warmoth delegation in its contest for recognition. Youngblood on the other hand is bitterly opposed to Harrison and will work for any one who has the slightest chance of beating him.

WOLCOTT ON DECK.

He Admits that Harrison Has the Best Of It.

Minneapolis, June 4.—Senator Wolcott, of Colorado, one of the most energetic of the anti-administration men, emerging from the ante-rooms of the national committee room after the session had been in progress sometime, rushed upon a group of newspaper men and in his breezy, implusive way said:

"The trouble is that a lot of our men are not here yet. There's De Young, of California, and half a dozen others who have not shown up. If we only had all our men on hand we could lick them out of sight. Time is what we want now, to get our people together.

"But, say, did you ever see such a crowd of officeholders before trying to run a convention?

"I don't mean as delegates, but outside. I wish I could get a full list of them. All Wanamaker's chief officers seem to be here. There's Whitfield and Rathbone, and Inspector King. Secretary Noble isn't here, but Land Commissioner Carter is hustling, and then there's Meredith, with all the four or five thousand bureau of engraving appointments back of him, and Register Bruce and goodness knows how many more.

"I tell you they have promised not only all the offices in sight, but all that anybody else has ever promised before and that's about ten times as many as there are in existence. But," he added, reflectively, once more, "if we can only get our men here we can lick them."

WILL PRESENT BLAINE.

Littlefield, or Rockland, Will Fire His Bomb.

New York, June 4.—A special to the Press from Augusta, Me., says: "A private dispatch from the Maine delegation which is on its way to Minneapolis, says that Hon. Charles E. Littlefield, of Rockland, has been chosen to present Mr. Blaine's name to the convention. This action was the outcome of a conference held by the delegation."

HOWLERS FOR OHIO.

Bushnell Shouting for Blaine—Delegation Divided.

Chicago, June 4.—A Blaine crowd from Ohio landed at the Grand Pacific this morning led by Asa Bushnell, of Springfield, one of the delegates-at-large from the Buckeye state. The delegats accompanying him were: J. J. Allread, G. K. Nash, Cyrus Huling, and W. H. Johnson. All but Allread are Blaine men.

Gen. Bushnell declared that 34 of the 46 delegates from Ohio would vote for Blaine.

Mr. Allread, on the other hand, asserted that the delegation was for Harrison by a large majority, and that no amount of howling or shouting could stampede them. The second choice of both factions seems to be McKinley.

Several of the advance guard of the Pennsylvania delegation reached Chicago this morning. Judge John Gripp, H. P. Ford, J. P. Bingham and Dr. R. J. Black are among them. They are all Blaine men. Judge Gripp said Senator Quay had fixed things in Pennsylvania and that of the sixty-one delegates but twelve were for Harrison and thy were officeholders. Although I am a Blaine man I hardly think Mr. Blaine's position in the contest is a dignified one," sa'd Judge Gripp. "He should announce himself."

"New Hampshire is true to Harrison," said F. C. Churchill, chairman of the New Hampshire republican state central committee this morning, "and her 16 votes will be cast solidly for the president."

The New Hampshire delegation came in a special train and will leave for Minneapolis this afternoon.

NATIONAL COMMITTEE.

Nothing Done at the Opening Session.

Minneapolis, June 4.—At 11 o'clock the national committee met in their headquarters on the parlor floor and went at once into executive session.

Orders were given that no cards should be sent in and as up to noon no member had appeared in the corridor it is impossible to say what has been done.

The colored messenger at the door proudly sported a Blaine button, whereupon the report went forth that the committee was against the president. This report found many believers, but the Harrison men continued to assert that they had a majority.

An impression prevails that the opponents of Harrison, or the committee, owing to the absence of several of their number who have not yet arrived, are desirous of postponing action on the question of temporary organization and on the contesting delegations until the absent members come in.

Land Commissioner Carter said that he did not expect the committee to do anything important to-day.

At 12:45 Col. Swords, the sergeant-at arms of the committee, announced that the committee had decided to admit the Indian Territory delegates to seats on the floor of the convention without the right to vote.

It was voted to refer all contests save that from Alabama to a special committee of seven, the Alabama contest to go before a special committee of three.

These sub-committees will be appointed and then the committee will take a recess for luncheon. There are 40 committeemen present.

The committee adjourned to Monday without completing the temporary organization.

The contests before the committee are interesting.

Hon. C. Clay Evans, of Tennessee, holds the proxy of W. W. Murray as member of the national committee. Murray is a federal officeholder, and is absent from the country.

George W. Hill, who was appointed member of the committee by the state convention, will contest Mr. Evans' proxy. Mr. Hill is a Blaine man, while Mr. Evans is a supporter of Mr. Harrison.

The contest over recognition between them is expected to be the first contest between the Harrison and anti-Harrison factions in the national committee.

BLAINE WILL NOT REFUSE.

Clarkson Gives It Out That Jim Knows His Business.

New York, June 4.—A Minneapolis special to the Press says that Mr. Clarkson, in reply to a question from Senator Hansbrough, of North Dakota, said:

"You can state positively on my authority that Mr. Blaine will not refuse the nomination."

Senator Quay, who was standing by gave assent to Mr. Clarkson's language.

CONVENTION GOSSIP.

Miscellaneous Mention picked up at Minneapolis.

Minneapolis, June 4.—Gen. Alger is not going to be behind in the matter of headquarters. He has telegraphed to W. E. Steele, chairman of the accommodation committee to have the old Minneapolis club house opened up for the entertainment of his friends.

A familiar story which the friends of Mr. Cleveland will recognize, was started in one of the Minneapolis papers this morning by an anonymous "Blaine man." He was quoted as saying that the beautiful badges which the Harrison men are wearing are made of English silk, and as insinuating that they were brought into this country duty free. The Harrison men of course flatly deny ehis story.

The arrival of Boutelle, of Maine, Blaine's intimate and personal friend, is anxiously awaited by adherents of Harrison and of Blaine. The impression has got abroad that he is coming with a message from the secretary.

Warner Miller is another man who is anxiously looked for and who is expected to wield considerable influence among the uninstructed element.

Chauncey Depew, another of the heavy weights of the New York delegation, will be in by noon, ready to commence work in his own quiet and effective way in behalf of the president. The Harrison element is relying largely on Depew's influence with the New York delegation and believes that he will be able to bring it in line for the president, Platt and Fassett to the contrary notwithstanding.

Accompanying ex-Congressman Cannon this morning were Senator Cullom, head of the delegation, National Committeeman ex-Congressman Mason, of Chicago, and a number of the other delegates.

Hon. George Massey, delegate-at-large from Delaware and one of the leaders of the republican party in the Hen and Chickens state, is pronouncedly in favor of Harrison and says that the full delegation will be inclined the same way. He admits, however, that in travelling from Colorado Springs he has found the Blaine sentiment stronger, both en route and here in Minneapolis, than he had expected, but he does not look for Blaine's success. "It will be either Harrison or neither," he said, "and Alger, I am convinced will develop strength that will make him a considerable factor in finally determining the outcome. By the same token the Blaine people are making estimates that I know to be inaccurate as regards certain localities and in many particulars."

Gerald Pierce, one of the delegates from North Dakota, the position of whose delegation has been a subject of discussion, was much gratified over the receipt of a letter from a delegate who had been classed as doubtful in which the writer said he was "for Harrison, first, last and all the time." and stated that a majority of the delegates were with him.

HEMMED IN BY DISEASE

Terrible Scenes in the Cholera Districts.

Persons Trying to Escape from the Scourge are Shot Down by Soldiers.

London, June 4.—Advices from Persia state that cholera continues to rage in the province of Khorassan and is increasing in virulence.

By order of the shah the Persian authorities took energetic steps to prevent the spread of the disease westward in the direction of Teheran, and these efforts have been successful.

Toward Afghanistan, however, there are signs that the ravages of the disease are extending and many cases were reported in the neighborhood of the frontier.

The people who are attacked receive no medical assistance and are driven back if they attempt to leave their infected homes.

Soldiers are stationed around the plague-stricken villages with orders to shoot any one who attempts to pass the line, and the plague is extinguishing by compelling the whole population of a village to keep together.

Inhabitanats who are not stricken are compelled by force to bury the dead.

In Meshid, the capital of Khorassan, the European residents have given intelligent direction to the plans of the local authorities so far as the prejudices of the latter would permit and the cholera is being gradually stamped, although it continues to cause many deaths.

BLAINE RESIGNS.

The Secretary of State Decides to Quit

The Cabinet of President Harrison.

FIENDS NEAR DELPHOS.

Robbery and Outrage in Van Wert County.

Mrs. Freiberg the Victim of Two Night Prowlers—A Reward Offered for Their Arrest.

Deplhos, O., June 4.—(Special)—One of the most dastardly outrages and robberies recorded in Van Wert county history was committed upon the person of Mrs. Freiberg Thursday.

Mrs. Freiberg is a respectable German widow living about four miles northwest of Delphos, O., secluded and alone with her only daughter, Mary, where they have lived for years past. Her husband died six years ago.

Both Mrs. Freiberg and the girl retired about 9 o'clock, shortly after which they heard a gentle rap at the door. Mrs. Freiberg arose and upon inquiring as to who was there, received the reply:

"We are lost and would like to know the nearest way to Latty."

Upon this Mrs. Freiberg opened the door with the intention of giving the desired information, but was greatly alarmed to see two burly men force their way into the room.

She gave one scream of "robbers," but was prevented from giving any further alarm at the point of a revolver and requested to retire instantly to her bedroom.

Seeing that resistance was of no avail she ran to her room and slammed the door behind her, intending to leave the rest of the house to their disposal, but not satisfied with this one of the fiends followed and outraged her.

In the mean time Mary made her escape from the house and hurriedly ran through the dark to their nearest neighbors, who lived about half a mile distant, where she related the scene at their home as best she could.

Mr. Schweilinger went to the house, but the robbers were gone.

Upon examintation it was found that three hundred dollars, a gold watch and other valuables, amounting in all to about four hundred dollars were missing.

Upon coming from the house the next morning there was found in the yard a cabinet size photo, which no doubt was accidentally dropped by the desparadoes.

Upon showing it to Mrs. Freiberg she recognized it as being the man who committed the horrible outrage.

From appearance of the photo and the description by Mrs. Freiberg, he is a man about 5 feet 10 inches tall, weight about 160 pounds, dark hair, hazel eyes, which are deeply set, carries an erect posture, and from appearance is about 28 or 30 years of age. Has a sandy colored mustache.

Being comfortably situated financially she has offered a reward of $1,000 for the arrest and conviction of the criminals.

VERDICT FOR DEFENDANT.

New York, June 4.—The jury in the suit of Father Francis Dent against Bishop Ryan, of Buffalo, for $100,000 damages for slander, returned a verdict for the defendant in the supreme court, Brooklyn, last night.

Father Dent had alleged that Bishop Ryan had called him a perjurer, forger and unchaste person, unfit to associate with Christians.

SPEAKS FOR ITSELF.

The Work of Drs. Copeland and Bell Needs No Bombastic Assertion.

The Results Speak for Themselves—Patients Who Contribute the Testimony—Nothing in Test But Professional Ability.

It is the practice of those who can gain fame in no other way to announce themselves as the greatest in their line of effort. Drs. Copeland and Bell do not do this. They let their work prove their ability. They publish from week to week the statements of enthusiastic patients who have been restored to health by them and they do not attempt to traduce rivals or abuse people whose competition they dread. It is needless to say that their work is scientifically done. Being specialists in nose, throat and lung diseases, they do not advertise vegetable remedies or magnetic compounds or nostrums that will work a cure on sight. They simply state that they are physicians who are skilled in their work and who can accomplish what they start out to do. A word to the wise is sufficient. If these statements do not convince there is no amount of assertion that can. They submit the testimonials and rest their case on the results, so substantially vouched for.

SORE THROAT AND COUGHING

Three Years of Constant Suffering From Catarrh—Relief and Cure.

"My throat grew so bad it was difficult for me to talk distinctly, and I had a constant tickling sensation there, followed by a hacking cough."

How many victims of catarrh can say the same thing. This is the statement of Mr. Patrick Mahoney, who lives at the corner of Starr avenue and ——— street. He is an employe at Roth & Friedman's Knitting Mill.

"A severe cold and then other colds. This is the way it began. That was three years ago. My nose stopped up. There was a constant dripping of matter into my throat. Hawking and spitting almost constantly. Throat raw and sore. Coughing spells in the morning, raising a thick, tenacious mucus. Appetite poor, with indigestion. Sour stomach after meals. Food lay heavy on stomach. Bowels constipated.

"My throat grew so bad it was hard for me to talk distinctly. I had a tickling sensation there, followed by a hacking cough. I felt dull and stupid, and my work was a continual drag on me.

"A friend of mine told me he had been treated by Drs. Copeland and Bell. I went to them and placed myself under their treatment. From the time I did so I began to mend. By degrees my head was cleared; then my throat got well. Hawking and spitting stopped. The cough disappeared and now it bothers me little. I eat heartily and relish my food. My bowels are regular. I work with ease from morning till night. I sleep well and in fact I feel like a new man.

"This wonderful change has been wrought by Drs. Copeland and Bell. I give them this testimonial, hoping that everyone who is afflicted as I was will do as I did and be cured, for a cure is certain in the hands of these physicians."

AWFUL SUFFERING!

It Began Ten Years Ago—A Recital of Great Interest to Catarrhal Patients.

There are few people who could stand such suffering as Mr. James Crook, of Aloy street, West Toledo. Those who read his statement will be amazed. Said he:

"My trouble began about ten years ago. I suffered from repeated colds. My head stopped up and soon I found I could not breathe without fear of choking. Matter dropped into my throat and this caused me to choke also. There was so much of it I could not cough it loose or remove it in any way.

"I had headaches over my eyes and they were so bad at times that I was obliged to lie down. There was a scum in my throat a quarter of an inch thick. My throat would feel so bad at times that I would have to sip water to relieve it. A cough set in and it has been with me for three years. I would cough so hard, often, that I would vomit. I could not lie on my back for fear of smothering. I was ashamed to go into a barber shop, for my catarrh was so bad that I could myself detect the offensive odor.

"My chief trouble was shortness of breath, heart-fluttering and dizziness. I often staggered and seemed about to fall. I had sharp, shooting pains, stabbing like a knife, around my heart.

"The catarrh affected my hearing and I became so deaf that I could not hear the sound of a hammer when I was coopering a barrel.

"My appetite was poor. I had great pains in my stomach when I ate and after meals my stomach was sour and filled with gas, which caused belching and bloating. My bowels were very costive and I had cold feet all the time.

"Well, I placed myself, after much persuasion from my friends, in the hands of Drs. Copeland and Bell. I was a hard case, then, and do not believe that I could have lived much longer. I have been under the treatment of many physicians, but no one ever helped me as Drs. Copeland and Bell have. Now my headache is a thing of the past, my heart is stronger and troubles me no more. My appetite is good and I relish my food. My bowels are regular, the sore throat has disappeared and in fact I feel strong and well and am like a new man."

This statement is signed and is given to the public as the free, candid and voluntary affirmation of a gentleman who desires others to profit by his example.

DEATH OF MIDY MORGAN

The Pioneer Woman Writer on Live Stock.

An Oddity in Journalism in the East.

Born in Ireland She Came to This Country and at Once Made Herself Famous the World Over.

New York, June 4.—Midy Morgan, whose death at a Jersey City hospital this week was mentioned in these dispatches, was an exceedingly curious character in New York, as well as very eccentric.

For nearly a quarter of a century she was the live stock reporter of the Times and an expert writer for various other sheets on the subject of cattle.

That was an odd career for a woman. But the oddest thing about it all was the fact that she used to beat strong, live men engaged in the same occupation. What Midy Morgan didn't know about the points of a stallion, a steer or a fat milch cow wasn't worth the knowing. Woman though she was, she could talk cross-breed and pedigrees like a scientist. And if there had been a chair created anywhere for animal stirpiculture it would have been given to Midy Morgan.

She was a big, raw-boned woman, and could often be seen in brogans and very short, coarse skirts, picking her way across the mud of Broadway in spring time, or the slush of Park row in midwinter, with a battered felt bonnet on her head—a sort of a cross between a Gen. Grant and an Alpine. In summer time she wore a cheap, wofully unfashionable hat, made of dark straw, with no pretense whatever to decoration.

She died at midnight Tuesday in the St. Francis hospital, Jersey City. Over a year ago she slipped and fell on the sleet in the cattle yards across the Hudson, and she has never been really well since. But the immediate cause of her death was dropsy, complicated by other internal troubles. She died from the results of a necessary operation.

She was odd, but she was very good and kindly, they say who knew her. Her advent in America came about in a way strange, like all her doings. "Midy" is Irish for Mary," she used to say, "and two 'r's' in Mary would make it 'marry,' a thing, bless your heart, I would never be foolish enough to do." And she never did.

The story of her life as printed in the World is as follows: Midy Morgan was born in Cork, November 22, 1828. She was the child of Anthony and Jane Morgan, as the Irish baptismal records have it. Anthony and Jane Morgan were eminently respectable Irish landholders. There were numerous other children besides the subject of this sketch. Her father died in 1865. Whatever land and moneys he died possessed of fell to the first born son. "Midy" got the smallest kind of a patrimony. But she was a brave woman, and nothing ever daunted her in life. The end of the same year saw her in Rome, buoying up her sister Jane, whom she took to the Eternal City to study art. Jane Morgan studied the old masters, and after a while went back to the British isles. "Midy" stayed behind.

She had met Charlotte Cushman and other clebrated birds of passage in Rome. She made a journey to Florence. While a frolicsome Irish girl at home she had watched the races on the curragh of Kildare with breathless interest, and as a fearless hunter she had taken a ditch and cleared a fence oftentimes with intrepidity. Of course all that was years ago. But when she was in Florence she came in contact with Victor Emmanuel. He became interested in the sporting Irish woman and sent her back to Ireland on a royal commission to get blue-blood horses for his stables. Midy Morgan has since kept sacredly a badge and a beautiful watch, studded with brilliants, which the late king gave her as a mark of her ability in picking out good horseflesh.

She was offered the position of equerry to the king, it is said. The string of huntress mares she brought back to Italy gave Miss Morgan a prominence in the eyes of Italy's king, Victor, which was a passport to all the royal "at homes" and receptions of the capital. She came to America in 1869. She wanted to make more money, and that's the beginning of her American story. She had letters from George P. Marsh to Henry Raymond, of the Times, and Horace Greeley, of the Tribune.

When she landed in New York Raymond had just been found dead on his own doorsteps, and somehow or other the letter presented to the grizzled editor of the Tribune didn't carry weight. Miss Morgan, however, found a friend in the World. Her first newspaper work in America was done for Manton Marble in her reports of the Saratoga races.

After that she identified herself with the Times; at her special work she has been a unique success. They claim that in her 22 years of work in New York she has saved at least $75,000, and she was a pioneer among women-workers on the press.

Midy Morgan was not only a cattle reporter, which was odd, but she was a woman of quaint vagaries, which made her interesting. She brought her artist sister Jane with her to this country. They were both artists, as far as that goes, in their different ways. Midy Morgan used to tramp through snow, slush and the sloughs of Jersey red mud to make up her market reports. Her shoes were rough and like a 'longshoreman's. Sometimes when in a generous mood she used to plank her foot down on a bootblack's box and, lifting up high her short serge skirts, had her boots blacked like a man. She was six feet in height. She was uncouth in dress and she talked about the merits of cattle with the sangfroid of a ranchman. But that was the vernacular of her trade, where sex didn't count. Apart from all this, she was an accomplished woman, who spoke three or four languages, and, aside from her masculine proclivities, she had a soft, modulated voice—that exquisite thing in woman.

But Midy Morgan saved money during her work on this side, and a good deal of it she sunk in a bizarre house on Staten Island. No end of paragraphs have been written about that jail-like home of hers in Bard avenue. Jane Morgan lives there now. The oddity of its builder is everywhere evident in the building. In the first place, all the windows of the ground floor are barred like a prison, and in order to get up to see the occupants of the house, it is necessary for a visitor to climb an iron ladder. In an addition there is a dining-room, a kitchen several feet below the level of the dining-room, and above there is a room made for Miss Morgan to do writing in, and a drying-room beside. Beneath the whole there is a vast cellar. The house is absolutely fire-proof.

Miss Jane Morgan, who has studied art at Munich and other European capitals, has lent the cunning of her hand to the decoration of the interior, and the whole house is richly and strangely furnished. Scattered all about there are numberless indications of the owner's sporting propensities, in the way of horns and hides and furs. Conspicuous among the various oddities of the barricaded stronghold is a bath. A tub, which is kept constantly filled with cold water, is set in the floor six feet in depth. A marble divan, with a marble pillow, is one of the appointments.

It was an odd house for Midy Morgan to build. She was so big, so squarely-built and always so self-reliant. She had great gray-blue eyes, a gaunt, massive figure, and was always gentle in spite of her masculinity. She had one dissipation. She played the races, they say. When she picked a favorite no one ever heard her boast. She loved animals passionately. She had grown up among them in the old country. And her great love for dumb beasts was a pretty sure sign of the generosity and goodness of her nature.

She is said to have left behind a snug little nest-egg. Nobody knows exactly how much. She spent at least $15,000 on her Staten Island fortress. It would bring half that at auction. For years she had a room over the Erie tunnel in Hoboken. After that she was station agent at Robinville, near Metuchen, N. J.

Her acquaintanceship with men of wealth was extensive. She made many friends among them, too. These proved to be of great value to her. Railroad men took delight in giving her inside information about railroad securities, most of which she turned to good account. Soon after her arrival in this country with the remnant of the little fortune which she had inherited from her father and had not spent, she met Commodore Vanderbilt. To him she intrusted all of her money. This the commodore invested in New York Central railroad securities. From time to time she made other purchases and added them to her hoard. Later she sent money home to needy relatives and for investment.

She opened deposits in various local savings banks. Then she bought real estate in one or two western states. To a few personal friends she made small bequests. But her sister, Jane, will receive the remainder of the estate.

Very odd she was, indeed. But she was good. Her body will probably be taken to Ireland.

"Last week I gave the old woman all I had left out of me month's wages to buy her a cloak, and now I've got to go 'round in me winter clothes till I can earn more money. Ef I hadn't been such a dinged fool I'd a listened to sense and bought me and the old woman all we needed of the Hyman Co. on EASY PAYMENTS, and had enough money left to go to the sea-sheor, be gob."

TOLEDO'S MUSEUM.

What a Detroit Paper Has to Say of the Manager.

The Detroit Illustrated Critic has the following in the current issue relative to Manager Moore and his museum, soon to be started in Toledo:

Manager Moore, of Wonderland, is about to become the Napoleon of museum managers in America, not excepting Kohl and Middleton of Chicago. He has leased a five-story building in Toledo and three score of men are now engaged in fitting up what the management have decided to make the most commodious and handsomest museum in America. This new house, with Wonderland here, and the Toronto house, places Mr. Moore at the head of more museums than any other manager in the country. The new Toledo house is located in the heart of the city, on Summit street, running back to Water street. The entrance in front will be of marble, and the entire front will be painted white, and decorated with electric lights in colors and flags of all nations. The specifications in fitting up the house call for $25,000, but Manager Moore does not expect to get out of it for much less than $30,000.

A feature of the new house will be a room devoted to the press; a pretty little parlor where the boys who make the "copy" can drop in, either to work or for a chat. The new house will open August 15, and all attractions will be booked for the three houses, opening at Toledo, coming here next and closing in Toronto. Manager Moore expects to make his headquarters for the circuit in Toledo.

Manager Jas. H. Moore is well known in Detroit as an astute business man, a jovial companion, and always a friend to those in need. He has lived here for years, and his new departure will be watched, with every wish for his success, by thousands of his friends here at his home, who cannot but admire the pluck, energy, and business sagacity, which has placed him at the very head of his business in his native land.

RIGHTS OF BLACK MEN

National Conference Held in Chicago.

Republican Party Asked to Keep Its Word,

Under Pain of Having the Negro Vote Cast for the Democratic Ticket.

Chicago, June 4.—The national conference of colored republicans held in response to a call issued by representatives of their race in numerous states opened this morning at 10 o'clock at the Bethel African M. E. church, the main auditorium of which was well filled. Hon. John G. Jones called the gathering to order and read the call for the convention, which was as follows:

"To the Colored People of the United States: After mature deliberation and a voluminous amount of correspondence with a large number of prominent members of our race in every state and territory of the Union, we have arrived at the conclusion that the time has come when the prominent and active colored republicans throughout the country should meet together to confer and deliberate upon our present condition, and upon the principles and measures of first importance to the advancement, welfare and progress of our race.

"We need the knowledge and information, the united character, combined wisdom and sound judgment of our prominent men in every section of the country in the coming presidential campaign. The separate coach law which has been enacted by the various legislatures of the southern states subjecting our race to injustice and abuse without end, and the numerous outrages that have been perpetrated upon them without the slightest cause or provocation in the south demand our immediate action and attention, so that we may be able to adopt some plan or method by which these wrongs may be redressed."

Amongst the signers to this appeal are John M. Langston and Perry Carson, of Washington, D. C.; J. Price, of Iowa; James Lewis, of Lousisiana; D. Augustus Straker, of Michigan; Daniel I. Lucas, of Missouri; Dr. W. T. Payton, of Kentucky; Dr. William B. Denisk, of New York; Rev. Jordan Chavis, of Quincy; S. B. Turner and F. H. Wright, of Springfield and many others, nearly all of whom were present.

In the speeches of the opening session the speakers took the ground that the meeting was not for the particular purpose of denouncing southern outrages as civil and political oppression were not sectional. It existed in the north as well as in the south.

The object of the convention was to secure the co-operation of the delegates and visitors to Minneapolis in placing in the party platform a plank pledging the republican party to stand for a national law extending to the colored people equal political and civil rights.

Rev. Dr. J. H. Maghee, one of the leading colored men of this city, said in relation to this matter: "We want recognition on the plane of justice. They may butcher the negro in the south, but in the north it is almost as bad. A few months ago a white man, who assaulted Edwin Walker, the prominent attorney and world's fair director, in this city, turned state's evidence and went free while his colored accomplice was sent to the penitentiary for 21 years.

"The colored man has few political rights in this state. Southern states that have never cast a republican electoral vote, and which have weight only in nominating conventions are yet tendered the plums of presidential patronage.

"We are twenty thousand voters strong in this state, and these votes cast with the democratic party would make Illinois democratic. We want the Minneapolis convention to realize this, and we want the party to bear it in mind when the plums are distributed."

FUNERALS BY THE HUNDRED.

London, June 4.—Another illustration of the adage that it is an ill wind that does not blow somebody some good was afforded in the fact that the board of directors of the St. Pancras cemetery at the annual meeting to-day reported a profit during the past year of $30,000, due to the large number of interments growing out of the epidemic of influenza.

The report says that for months the daily average of burials ranged from 40 to 100, and upon every burial there was a profit.

The presentation was made by Superintendent Borts in a graceful address and was responded to with much feeling by Mr. Young, who was taken entirely by surprise. The relations of Mr. Young and the employes have been so pleasant that much regret is felt on both sides at the termination of their relations.

Yesterday afternoon F. N. Quale, rigged out in long rubber boots and full fishing rig and tackle, stepped into J. E. Gunckel's office and displayed four fine black bass as the result of an hour's fishing at Waterville.

Mr. Gunckel maintained, after an examination, that the bass were caught in a net and endeavored to prove that Mr. Quale had not only not caught the bass, but had not been fishing yesterday.

Mr. Clarence Brown testified that he had just returned from Waterville and that the water was too high and muddy for fishing.

Mr. Quale stoutly defended his position, but when asked to show the line, which, if wet, would tell the tale, he wilted and refused to open his tackle box. The case will be appealed to the O. Y. C.

DR. BAUM'S LECTURES,

Aided by Stereopticon Views—At Trinity Chapel Next Week.

Grace church was crowded last night to hear Rev. Dr. H. N. Baum's second stereopticon lecture on Church History. Theodore, of Tersus, and Lanfranc, archbishop of Canterbury, and others were shown to be entirely independent of Rome, and the freedom of the English church was explained as guaranteed by magna charta. The audience was shown the fac simile of this foundation of all Anglican liberties, and striking pictures, proving that the great document originated with Lanfranc, the archbishop of Canterbury, in spite of Romish opposition. Wonderful ruins, magnificent cathedrals, grand old monasteries, gorgeous abbies, a marvelous variety of churches, striking battle scenes, were marshaled before those in attendance, while the lecturer illuminated all with a stream of eloquence at once delightful and instructive. One such lecture is worth a month of private study. There will be no lecture in Grace church to-night, but the services of Dr. Baum are secured for his three lectures for adults only in Trinity chapel at 8 p. m. next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

COMPLIMENTARY CONCERT

Given by the Oberlin Glee Club.

About seven hundred people were present at the concert given by the Oberlin Glee club at the Central Congregational church last night under the auspices of Toledo council, No. 21, Every seat in the church was taken and chairs had to be brought in to accommodate the crowd. The personnell of the club is as follows:

G. B. Siddall, director; W. T. Upton, accompanist; R. A. Millikan, manager.

First tenor—Herbert Harroun, P. H. Metcalf, G. B. Siddall, B. T. Williams.

Second tenor—A. H. Currier, L. W. Hatch, E. P. Johnston, C. C. Kirkpatrick.

First bass—H. N. Burnham, Chas. Carter, A. A. Church, R. A. Millikan, W. A. Siddall.

Second bass—C. H. Adams, A. P. Blackstone, L. J. Ford, P. B. Patterson, Ira B. Penniman.

The entertainment committee of Toledo council were Richard M. McKee, Geo. B. Brown, Arthur W. Bunce.

Reception committee—E. E. Dow, Irving Belford, Thos. Biddle, Geo. W. Boos, David A. Harroun, Chas. Fox, Samuel Heston, J. W. Myers, Gaines P. Roberts, Geo. A. Stockton, E. J. Tippett, Arthur E. Lawrence, J. W. McMurray, J. C. Rike, M. W. Platt, William Thernier.

It is difficult to make any distinction among so many good things, but the singing of Mr. P. H. Metcalf, first tenor, was the finest that has ever been heard in Toledo. He was encored repeatedly, as was also Mr. L. J. Ford, second bass. That Toledo is a city of music lovers is evidenced by the large crowds in attendance at both concerts last night.

STREET RAILROADS AGAIN.

Lively Discussion Before the Council Committee.

A rather lively discussion occurred in the railroad committee of the council at a meeting held last evening, over an ordinance requiring the Toledo Electric Street Railway company and the Consolidated Street Railway company to jointly reconstruct with heavier rails, the track used by both companies on Adams street, Summit street, Ottawa street and Monroe street, half of the expense to be paid by each company. If either company refuses the other can build the track and charge a reasonable rental for the same.

Mr. David Robison, jr., was present, and urged the approval of the ordinance, but the Consolidated company was not represented at the meeting.

The committee was about equally divided on the ordinance, as it looked very much like more street railway war. Mr. Hodge moved to lay the ordinance over for one week, but this was lost by a vote of 5 to 4, and the ordinance was approved by the same vote.

An amendment to the general street railway ordinance, section 604, presented by Mr. Walker, was that no street cars shall pass on a curpe.

AMUSEMENTS.

Chas. A. Loder To-night, Frank Mayo and Cleveland Coming.

This evening will be the last opportunity of seeing Chas. Loder in his amusing comedy success, Oh What a Night, at the People's this season. It is an excellent piece, full of good music, dancing and other features.

Next week Frank Mayo, the elder, will appear at the People's in Davy Crockett, a piece in which he has a world-wide reputation. Davy Crockett is unlike any other play in that it has not a single strong point in itself, and yet it is made one of the most entertaining of representations, simply because a true artist has conceived an ideal of the hero of the play, far above and beyond what an ordinary man could have even dreamed. He has taken a backwoods hunter and given him a nobility of soul and a high type of manliness that command the admiration and honor of everyone to whom he is introduced. He never loses his identity—never forgets that he is what he is. His heart is great and broad, like the forest he roams; his love pure and simple, like the brook in which he laves; his words full of poetry, but not the poetry of the town; his tones musical as the song of the birds and the whispering of summer leaves. Mayo's "Crockett" is a piece of art.

Friday evening Cleveland's minstrels will give a big show at Wheeler's. Many of the old favorites are with the company, including Rice and Cushman, and a good performance is assured.

THE FLORAL CONCERT.

Music Lovers Enjoyed a Rare Treat at the First Church Last Night.

A large audience gathered at the First Congregational church last evening in response to invitations issued by the Young Ladies' Floral society of the church. The program, which has been printed in the Bee, was rendered in a faultless manner. The performers were at their best, and received enthusiastic plaudits for their good work. The soloists were Mrs. Currier and Miss Irene Fuller, the strength, sweetness and beauty of their voices being well known to Toledo people. Mr. W. F. Dewey also sang a solo (a) "Who is Sylva?" (b) Ecologue, in his usual good style. A violin solo, by Mr. Joe Fisk, was enthusiastically received and encored, as was also a mandolin and guitar duet by Messrs. Gibsone and Perry. The organ solos by Mr. Cushing were executed in a masterly manner, and the Mathias orchestra, of which Toledo is justly proud, gave two numbers, Overture, Zur Operetta, Franz Schubert—Franz Von Suppe, and Tancredi—Rossini. Their playing was perhaps the best feature of the evening. The floral decorations were beautiful and their arrangement showed exquisite taste and artistic ability. After the concert most of the audience repaired to the parlors below, where ice cream and cake was served.

LABOR NOTES.

Workingmen Enthusiastic Over the Proposed Home.

The laboring classes of Toledo, at least the organized class, are very enthusiastic over the project of a "Labor Home" in Toledo. Said a prominent labor leader to a Bee yesterday: "Yes, I think permanent headquarters for the labor organiztaions of Toledo will be secured. Cincinnati, Cleveland, Dayton, and many other cities have a 'home' and it is well known that no other city of its size in the country has its laboring classes so well organized as Toledo. The Central Labor union has taken up the matter and if the unions will work together harmoniously the 'Labor Home' is assured."

Miss Hoagland was the recipient of many beautiful presents. Among the guests were the Misses Rath, Murphy, Blood, Bowar, Murray, and Messrs. A. Kinger, Frederick, W. T. Huntsman, H. H. Nelson, F. Whartenby, G. Raymond, Star Husted, Johnson and others.

The Misses Josie and Emily Zwiker, of Field avenue, entertained a number of their young lady friends at a dinner party in honor of Miss Emily's birthday. The tables were beautifully decorated with flowers and about 2 o'clock an elaborate dinner was served. Among those present were: Misses Anna Thomas, Lizzie Moedinger, Ruey Woehler, Lulu Strasser, Louise Klotz, Anna Smith, Minnie Everett, Norma Larvey, and Ida Alexander.

Last Wednesday evening Mr. and Mrs. Tom Beer celebrated their fifth wedding anniversary at the home of Mr. George Platfoot, on Jerome street. About 50 couples were present. The evening was spent in dancing, cards and conversation. The Sunflower Serenading club furnished the music. At midnight a sumptuous repast was partaken of, to which all did ample justice. Mr. and Mrs. Beer were the recipients of many beautiful presents, among which was a magnificent dining room set from the Pleasure Euchre club.

Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Eyster celebrated the second anniversary of their marriage last evening at their pleasant home on Oakwood avenue. Progressive euchre was the game of the evening. Miss Becker won first prize—a set of handsomely decorated china ice cream plates; Mr. Cone first prize for gentlemen, a beautifully bound volume of Hoyle. Dainty refreshments were served and the evening was a thoroughly delightful one.

Blaine Resigns

Blaine has resigned as Secretary of State. This is startling republican news as it means the utter disruption of the republican party. Primarily it signifies the fiercest fight ever precipitated in an American political convention. Secondarily it means the formation of such factions as will defeat each other and the party in November.

Such a spectacle never before was presented in this country—a cabinet officer professing loyalty to his chief and plotting his destruction. The present resignation does not make the act a whit more honorable. Harrison was led to believe by Blaine himself that there would be no opposition. Now, three days prior to the convention, he leaves the cabinet to enter the lists at Minneapolis.

It is audacious politics but Blaine is always audacious, therefore it is Blaine all over.

The chasm deepens and the breach widens and into the depths will drop both Blaine and Harrison, and, if the democratic convention in Chicago does not make a fool of itself, the next President will be a democrat. This is what Blaine's resignation really and fully signifies.

The Natural Gas Ordinance.

The aldermen who voted to continue the present natural gas ordinance five years are intelligent enough to know that it will be worthless unless accepted by all parties to the contract. It would be an insult to them to say they lack intelligence to understand this proposition. This being true, what excuse is there for not giving the offer of the gas company such consideration as any other business proposition is entitled to? Consumers of Northwestern gas are making contracts at the new price, twenty cents a thousand. Those who are most familiar with gas matters, whether they be of the Northwestern, city plant, or outside experts, say that twenty cents is none too high for present conditions.

Every taxpayer is also interested in having the city plant made remunerative. The price all around ought to be twenty cents, and the councilmen should agree with the Northwestern's figures and then the gas trustees should make the same price for city gas.

More than sixty per cent. of the voters of Toledo decided that the city should engage in the gas business. They are now honorably bound to see that the plant shall be made remunerative. There are many improvements to be made in Toledo, which cannot be inaugurated with the heavy debt hanging over the corporation. As the taxpayers must pay the debt, they should be willing that whatever commodities the city has to sell shall command such prices as are charged in other large cities. This is the practical, common sense business way of looking at this question. The council has the power to do the right thing now to help the city to reduce its enormous debt, and it should throw no stumbling stone in the way. The twenty-cent rate should be ratified.

All Pull Together.

There is opportunity again for Toledoans to help push the city to the front among the great cities of the country. Such opportunities have been rejected heretofore and the city has grown in spite of itself. Just now the Pennsylvania company seeks investment that will make Toledo a greater shipping point by water, as well as by rail, and, if the broad spirit of liberality which should actuate all citizens is manifested the city will reap incalculable benefits.

Yesterday the Bee recorded the big purchase of property by the company on the west side of the river. To-day the company will probably consummate a deal by which it will acquire about fifty acres near the rolling mills, giving it immense dockage on the East Side. If properly encouraged the company will invest nearly two millions of dollars in improving its newly acquired property and will give Toledo as fine dockage facilities as are possessed by any city on the lakes. This investment ought to inspire all citizens to pull together for Toledo. The bickerings of the past should never be renewed. A united front and an earnest effort on the part of our people will give Toledo the greatest substantial boom it ever had. Everybody now, and hereafter, a strong pull for Toledo.

The Raging Rivers.

The people who live along the banks of the raging western rivers have something besides conventions to think of these days. Something must be done for them, and their farms and homes. The New Orleans Times-Democrat discusses the question of levees and outlets, taking texts from the testimony of Capt. S. S. Leach of the United States corps of engineers, in charge of a section of work on the Mississippi, given before the House committee last year. It is all in favor of levees as opposed to the outlet theory. Such dikes as he proposes serve a double purpose, as levees, and for commercial use. He believes the construction of them will not cost over $15,000,000—not a large amount when the interests at stake are considered. The attention of the country is called anew to Capt. Leach's exhaustive report at this time when the matter is demanding thorough attention and prompt treatment. No campaign cry against the river and harbor bill extravagance should be applied to these urgency cases.

The Money Question.

An exchange takes the Tribune's list of New York millionaires, made out for campaign purposes, and copyrighted, and makes an estimate of where some of the money goes. The number of foreign countesses and duchesses in the families of great wealth show that a good many American dollars go to buy titles with the husband-attachment, for the daughter of Croesus. And it was so little time ago our sturdy ancestors, the founders of this republic, suffered privation and death to be free from the overbearing and wicked injustice of subjection to titles!

But the matter of where the money goes is not so great a consideration as it is for the wealth producers, the laborers of the land, to discover the means by which a few of the many become possessed of so much of this world's treasure, while they, the party of the first part, have to scrabble continually to keep their heads above water. In no country are the natural resources so greatly in favor of labor, and in no country are greater gulfs between the rich and the poor. What brings about such conditions in a country where the people rule?

A Specimen Outrage.

A terrible southern outrage is reported from Arkansas. A paper published in that locality tells this story of it: A Massachusetts drummer thought to exhibit his versatility by making a speech to the Arkadelphians, telling them all about how affairs stood in their town and section. When he got to the point of defending negro rapists by insinuations against the virtue of white women, the 'delphians let fly a lot of eggs at him and served notice that he would better grab his grip and get out of town. Various northern papers have made a shocking outrage of this for campaign use.

Senator Hiscock is having a bad time about the alien voter. He is right as concerns the ignorant man who can neither read nor write, but he forgets that the greatest flood of ignorance, incompetency and superstition that ever came pouring into American citizenship was when his party opened the gates alike to the intelligent mulatto and the Gulf State plantation hands, who can scarcely speak, to-day, a language that a northern man can understand. Like the states which knock for admission into the union, their probable political complexion determines the opening of the doors. So with the voter. This is the creed of Mr. Hiscock's party and of this the gentleman is fully aware and to it he gives full approval while he is resolving against alien citizens.

The Harrison contingent will have a fighting strength in convention which the Blaine following does not rightly estimate. Fully two-thirds of the delegates are either office holders or their warm friends. They have everything to gain by the continuance of the present administration. They have little to hope for from a change. They will not let go of a faction that has helped them. They will fight for their own. They are organized and determined, and neither eloquence nor the waving of the majestic plume will break their ranks. They love Benny for the offices he has given them. They are not ingrates, and they will beat down the advances of the jingo statesman. Watch the proceedings the next few days and see if this is not the way the Minneapolis convention will be conducted.

The Ohio man gets there. Yesterday's New York Recorder has a picture of Samuel Benner, "the prophet of Wall street, by occupation a farmer of Ohio." It says of his right to the term prophet:

Some of the leading speculators depend on his horoscopes, and faith in them has been increased by the profits which they have returned. They are based on things a good deal more substantial than the positions of the planets. Mr. Benner figures out the supply and demand, the consequences of the prices that have been prevailing, and altogether makes up his calculations on the basis of natural and reasonable results.

Great things were said and written in the start, about the Nicaragua canal—a private enterprise. Like all other private enterprises which have the courage, the persistency and the pull, the company is now begging of Congress for an appropriation. The government would better get even with its subsidized trans-continental railroads before it enters into any more transportation schemes.

"The People's candidate" as a title for Blaine will hardly go. In the first place, the "People's party" will object, and in the second place the majority of the people of the country are not Blaine worshippers—not even the majority of his own party. The worshippers will need to try again. What's the mater with Ingersoll's "plumed knight?" Has that become bedraggled?

Senator Dolph says, in his paper on the Harrison administration in the North American Review: "Mr. Harrison has offended some leading republicans by his appointments." Quite right, Mr. Dolph, and not only to leading republicans, but to leading citizens all over the country, have many of his appointments proven an offense.

Said Lord Salisbury: "I do not believe in the unrestricted power of parliament, any more than I do in the unrestricted power of kings." And Gladstone calls Salisbury "a political incendiary." They have almost as good political times over there as we do in this country.

Eastern democrats who are exploiting their superior virtue because of their opposition to appropriations for river and harbor improvements, are showing provincial narrowness rather than political largeness.

The most distressful thing the wicked democrats are doing now is to show by their utterances that they care not a straw whether it is Blaine or Harrison, so far as what they have to do with it is concerned.

The Harrisonians are organized; the opposition are not. Organization is a big count to start with.

The scientists say there are two well-known periodical comets overdue "to perihelion"—the Winnecke comet of '58 and the Brooks comet of '86. The Bee is very sorry that these comets should be detained, as it may possibly inconvenience the passengers who counted upon seeing the earth through their glasses at the regular time, but we don't know what can be done about it.

It may be remembered that Mr. Depew is an office-holder, also; he is a world's fair commissioner by the grace of President Harrison and receives $6.50 a day when on duty. When you chase down a red-hot, aggressive administration boomer you are likely to find a salary, more or less, at the bottom of the enthusiasm.

The city of New York may be "a long, narrow pig-trough," as Mr. Rudyard Kipling has elegantly said. But there are some specimens of long-snouted, razor-backed East-Indian and English cross-breed specimens of swine that would better not attempt to take a drink there right away.

Why doesn't Blaine say something? He has said something but the trouble is no one believes what he says.

Another point settled: Commissioner Raum says he never showed favoritism in distributing favors.

THE BEE AT MINNEAPOLIS.

The hundreds of republicans in Toledo and northwestern Ohio who will attend the national republican convention in Minneapolis will be glad to know that their favorite paper for news, the Bee, will be on sale during the convention. Copies may be obtained at the news stand in the New York Life Insurance Company building, which will also be general press headquarters. The Bee will be a lively buzzer next week.

FOUR FEET UNDER WATER

Heavy Rain Storms in Pennsylvania.

All Trains Late, Towns Inundated, and Much Damage Reported.

Allentown, Pa., June 4.—A fearful rainstorm, attended by several cloudbursts, covered an area of 60 miles along the Lehigh river yesterday afternoon, from White Haven to Easton.

The lower part of the town of White Haven is four feet under water and cellars are full of water.

On the opposite side of the river the small streams running down the mountain sides are swelled and are washing out the Lehigh Valley railroad tracks in several places and delaying all trains. Gravel trains were put to work at once and trains are expected to be running this morning.

At Freemansburg, 10 miles south of this city, there was a cloudburst which washed the quicksand over the New Jersey Central tracks just ahead of a northbound train. The obstruction had to be cleared away before the train could proceed. The fields were under water and considerable damage to crops is reported. Between this city and Emaus, six miles west, there was a terrific water spout. Hundreds of acres of cultivated ground are under water and there can be no estimate given to the damage to crops at this writing. On all roads trains are late.

"MIDDY MORGAN."

A unique character, the like of which is not known elsewhere in this country, or in the world, died Wednesday, at Jersey City—"Middy Morgan," the cattle market reporter of the New York Times. For twenty-three years Miss Morgan has held this place on the Times and her work has given to that paper the distinction of being an authority on facts and figures concerning price, condition and daily movement of cattle in New York market. She was 62 years old when she died and had given up her daily rounds but two weeks before. Miss Morgan was Irish born, daughter of a wealthy landed proprietor who gave her a fine education, but the accomplishments of the drawing room had no fascination for her compared with open-air life among the farm animals. While her sister studied art in Rome, Maria became known as a horse and cattle fancier, and King Victor Emanuel commissioned her to go to Ireland to buy saddle horses for his stable. She came to America in 1869. Commodore Vanderbilt engaged her to select the riding and driving horses for his stable. She was a regular contributor to the leading turf and market papers of the country. A sister and nephew are her only relatives in this country and it is believed her remains will be taken to Ireland for interment.

CURRENT COMMENT.

If the republicans want Force Bill Ben and more Bayonet reconstruction for the issue, they can very easily get all the issue they want.—St. Louis Republic.

The friends of the administration who are so anxious lest false friends of Mr. Blaine deprive him of honor should have made their anxiety known when Mr. Harrison asserted title to the foreign policy and the reciprocity policy of the state department.—New York World.

The dispatches report floods in Indiana, electric storms in Texas, cyclones in Kansas, freshets in Arkansas, water spouts in the Indian territory, and a crevasse in the republican party which is deepening and widening every hour. Truly, this is a remarkable season.—Kansas City Star.

Among the new bobs to the republican kite-tail is the National League fo College Republican clubs. This is an organization of college students. It is worthy of not in this connection that the college instructors are, with gratifying unanimity, enlisted under the democratic banner.—Elmira Gazette.

It is well known that with all his brilliancy Mr. Blaine is one of the riskiest of public men, and, even from the party standpoint, untrustworthy. It is extremely doubtful if he is in sympathy with his party in respect to any of the doctrines which the masses regard as fundamental, though he will undoubtedly, if nominated, indorse with fervor whatever platform is framed for him. And the masses of the party know this quite as well as they can be told.—Detroit Free Press.

The revelations that have been brought out concerning the character of some of the women employed in the pension bureau in Washington are alone sufficient to damn any head of a department who acknowledges their truth and allows that it isn't news to him. It is an insult to the decent and hard-working women in the bureau that they should be compelled to associate with such characters or lose their places. Out with Raum!—Boston Herald.

President Harrison is quoted as saying that "I can cheerfully ride down Pennsylvania avenue March 4 with any republican who may be fairly and honorably nominated at Minneapolis. I should feel it keenly if I had to ride down the avenue with a democrat." Mr. Harrison did ride down the avenue with a democrat four years ago and was then in an uncommonly cheerful frame of mind. He might try it again with profit to the republic.—Chicago Times.

The bicycle occasionally demonstrates in a most unexpected manner the usefulness claimed for it by its advocates. Trumbly, the ferocious brute who attempted to stamp Joseph Fish's countenance out of human semblance, was pursued by a man on a bicycle and kept in sight until a policeman could be found. General Miles is about to introduce the wheel into the army service, and will soon have a bicycle corps in training at Camp Sheridan. Perhaps progressive Major McClaughry will initiate the general's example. Policemen mounted on wheels might be useful in running down pickpockets and other light-fingered and fleet-footed offenders. Bicycles would be especially adapted, also, to the use of the boulevard police, who are now mounted on horses.—Chicago Herald.

UNCLE JONATHAN

Draws Some Conclusions from the Study of Political Economy.

My Dear Nephew—The liar in politics is the worst kind of a prevaricator. He is mean enough to steal sheep from a poor farmer that depends for a living on wool at twenty-two cents a pound—wool that for some reason or other, under the laws of this blessed country, gets lower in price every year, though I'm bound to say the price of goods doesn't get correspondingly cheap.

The political falsifier would say this is no such thing and look you straight in the eye while saying, even when he knew you knew he knew better. That's the kind of a fellow I mean, who is mean enough to steal sheep.

Sometimes I think, for the good of our morals and the health of our business, we have too much politics to the square inch in this country. It kind of keeps folks stirred up all the time and tempts many an otherwise truthful man to fib like everything, about forty times a day, when he gets well started.

You see most politicians are tetotally unlike your Uncle. Now, I am an honest politician if there ever was one, possibly because I can afford to be such, and let talent work out my destiny. It may seem egotistical to talk so, but as we are more or less creatures of circumstances, if the circumstances surrounding me are of a brainy nature, why, of course I can't help but get in the band wagon and go along near the head of the procession.

Some folks I know mistake brag for principle and I am afraid this is a failing of politicians. You have seen such, and whenever you hear one of those screeching, air-pounding chaps blow about all the greatness of the country from John Adams to now piled in the lap of his party, you can just put him down as one of the kind I am talking about. He has bragged so long that he forgets he is a liar, and thinks the people will swallow all his stuff for gospel principle.

We have got to give and take a good deal in this world. There is goodness in most everything if we know how, and want to find it, and, so I say the man who thinks he is always right and his party is never wrong is a liar, and I don't care who knows I say so.

There are some things that are so, and ought not to require any proving, but this is another singular thing about our politics—some folks will not believe anything unless you prove it to them.

Now, there's the question of taxes. It doesn't mean anything at all but just taking out your wallet and paying some of your money to somebody else for something, and if that something doesn't help you any, then the taxation isn't according to Gunter, even if the law says it is.

The easiest way to fool the people is to make believe you are doing something big while somebody else is paying for it. It is kind of hard on the fellow who foots the bill in the first place, but one by one the fellows get onto the racket and make the rest pay for the fun, and after awhile everybody has a burden, and its like lifting oneself with his bootstraps. It can't be done successfully.

This is a great country for taxes. Under the guise of loyalty, congress can make the pennies rattle right out of a fellow's pocket and he never finds fault—that is he don't if he is a natural born darn fool, and I must allow there are too many such in this land of liberty and the American flag.

Perhaps you think I don't take much stock in all this buncombe talk about taxing stuff to make industry thrive? No, I don't, and I think it is mighty queer that anybody else does, for in this land of invention and get there, if a fellow hasn't gumption enough to hoe his own row without making his neighbor pay a bonus for it, he had better sell out and move away and make room for somebody else.

Now, there is that frog pond in the center of my five acre tract that Col. Blower tricked me into buying: I am thinking of cleaning it out and making a nice fish pond and putting a big fountain in it, and making it attractive like. Don't you suppose it will help out the land which I own all around it? and can't I afford to pay for it myself without asking the folks all around the neighborhood to chip in? Of course it will, and of course I can, and so it is with a fellow's factory work. If he has a good thing that is worth making it will sell, and somebody will buy it at a fair price. If one man will not another will, but he can't sit down and wait for business to come, for it won't. He has got to get up and hustle. May be the world isn't his, as Monte Christo said, but the markets are, if the seller will push out. So what's the use of making his own blood and kin and all the rest of the folks pay a tax to make make him rich. It's confounded nonsense, that is what it is, and I know it, and so do you.

This kind of thinking and moralizing is becoming to a statesman, and I indulge it to the freest extent, though I argue on the other side to myself and see how the two opinions will jibe. But they don't jibe, and the more I study it the more I think the first principles of my industrial politics are right.

Talk about encouraging infant industries in a country that is one hundred and twelve years old the coming Fourth of July! I tell you and all of my constituents that a thing fit to be an industry in this great country now-a-days has no right to be a baby. It can jump into business without bolstering up. But so long as folks are willing to be hoodwinked into believing the more taxes they pay the more loyal they are and the more they think of Old Glory, so long you will find plenty of industries more than fifty years old that will plead the infant act and take all the government will give.

I have sort of drifted away from my text, but talking about political liars leads me into thinking right out loud on all the deception of polities, and so I say the biggest humbug of the whole lot is this thing of taxing yourself to get rich. Somebody else may, at your expense, but you just bet your bottom dollar you will not unless you have a soft snap of your own among the four thousand things on which Uncle Sam has put a tax. If you have, you can afford to be a campaign liar and make the man who pays you the taxes beat the bass drum till it bursts at the head of the torchlight procession.

Now, you may think I have learned all this in the books. Partly so, and the books are right, but mostly so because I am of an observing and investigating turn of mind and have tried to get down to the bottom facts as they really are.

I want to be right as a statesman, and coming from a long generation of truth-sayers I endeavor to do to everybody as I want them to do by me, and so I frankly say that I ain't much of a taxer myself. On this subject I am prepared to debate at the Corners or in congress, and keep an eye single to the honesty of purpose which the forefathers had in view when they licked George III. that we might be free and do somewhat as we please. Thus believing, and thus sticking to the point, I am,

Your earnest and fair Uncle,
JONATHAN BUSEMBARK.

KANUCKS ARE SCARED.

Alleged True Inwardness of Their Ministers' Trip to Washington.

Ottawa, Ont., June 4.—With reference to the departure of the Canadian ministers for Washington the Free Press says: "An intimation was received by the governor-general that unless the Dominion government withdrew from the position it had assumed in reference to the treatment of American vessels on the St. Lawrence canals, the American government would be compelled in self-defense to retaliate.

"It is believed that this intimation was accompanied by the threat that unless the government backed down, Canadian vessels would be debarred from the privileges of passing through the American canal at Sault Ste. Marie.

"The receipt of such a message threw the cabinet into a panic, and at hurriedly called meeting of the council it was decided to send Messrs. Foster and Bowell to Washington at once."

Philadelphia has six day nurseries where working women with children ranging from three months to eight years in age can leave them from 6:30 in the morning until 6:30 at night. Three meals and ample amusements are given, costing the mother six cents a day. These institutions are supported by voluntary contributions. Other cities have them on much the same plan.

PLACED IN THE WATER

The Two Gigantic Whalebacks Launched.

The Washburn and Pillsbury are Afloat.

Each Boat Will Carry Twenty-Eight Thousand Barrels of Flour—General Marine Mention.

Duluth, June 4.—(Special Marine Service)—Two whaleback steamers were consigned to the water at the shipyard of the American Steel Barge company at West Superior this afternoon.

They were christened the Pillsbury and Washburn, in honor of the flour magnates at Minneapolis.

The new boats will run in connection with the "Soo" line, which is owned by the Canadian Pacific, between Buffalo and Gladstone, and are the beginning of the lake fleet of the Canadian Pacific.

They are especially designed for flour trade and will carry 28,000 barrels of flour, equal to 2,800 tons, on every sailing from Gladstone.

The steamers are 322 feet in length, 42 feet beam, and 25 feet deep, and the net tonnage is 1,571.65. They differ in appearance from the other whalebacks afloat only in that they have gangways. A big crowd was present at the launching.

Trouble in Buffalo.

Buffalo, June 4.—Reported this morning that two officers of shoremens' union have left town with several hundred dollars of the union's funds, hoarded for use during the strike.

The angry demonstration of strikers today called out a large force of police, but the strikers left without precipitating a riot.

The Wreck of the Progress.

Strike Over.

Ashland, June 4.—Strikers on the ore docks here returned to work this morning. The threat of displacing them with Italians breaking the backbone of the strike.

Cleveland.

Cleveland, June 4.—Two or three boats were chartered late yesterday for ore from Two Harbors to South Chicago at 95 cents because of a blockade at Ashland.

On account of the settlement of the Ashland strike rates are a little stronger this morning, but it is doubtful if the old rate of $1.10 will be re-established.

Ore shippers are not disposed to force the market down on account of effect, such course would have on prospective ore sales.

Escanaba holds at 65 cents with boats being chartered several days ahead, but the feeling is not strong. Eighty-five cents is all that is offered from Marquette. Brokers are trying to get an advance on the rate of 50 cents for soft coal to Milwaukee.

WANT HAZELTINE'S SCALP.

Mine Workers After the Chief Inspector.

Massillon, O., June 4.—Petitions to Gov. McKinley are being circulated and signed by the miners of the Tuscarawas Valley generally, but especially in this district, asking for the removal from office of R. M. Hazeltine, chief inspector of mines.

The grievance briefly is that men employed at the Forest mine, four miles west of this city, demanded that a second opening or air shaft be made in the mine for the preservation of the health of the hundred or so miners who work there, as required by the mining laws of the state.

In January last the district mine inspector notified the owners of the mine to construct the required opening, and again, two weeks ago, the owners were demanded to have the air shaft made forthwith. Chief Mine Inspector Hazeltine then came here and revoked the order of the district inspector. As a result the entire force of miners quit work on the 23d of May, and will not return. The miners expect to secure a thousand signatures to the petitions.

THE WALLS CRUMBLED.

Two Children Killed by the Flying Debris.

Chicago, June 4.—The south wall of the building No. 312 West Fourteenth street, a two story structure, collapsed about noon to-day. Eddie Clancy, aged 13 years, was instantly killed; Frank Schlichta, aged 12 years, was fatally crushed, and Henry Grossman, who was playing with the boys at the time is missing, and is believed to be under the debris. A force of men was at once set to work to remove the wreckage. The cause of the disaster is unknown.

Housekeepers

Will Find great care necessary to prevent danger to the family food through the introduction of the low grade baking powders that contain lime and alum.

All baking powders that are offered the public under misrepresentation as to their ingredients are to be avoided.

Baking powders now advertised as having published upon their labels all the ingredients used in them are shown by the Government investigation to have in their composition four different substances not upon their label, amounting to a large per cent. of their entire weight, two of which substances are lime and sulphuric acid! Most of the alum powders are sold by falsely representing them as pure and wholesome cream of tartar powders.

Protection from alum baking powders can be had only by declining to accept any substitute for the Royal. All official tests prove it to be a cream of tartar baking powder superior to all others in purity, strength and wholesomeness.

See that no baking powder is received into your kitchen in place of the Royal.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

Dr. Gardiner Makes a Statement.

To the Editor—The article that appeared in a recent issue of the Bee, stating that I had been expelled from the Alumni association of the Toledo Medical college for being one of the parties preferring charges of alleged crookedness to the Illinois state board of health is untrue. It is a fact that a new society was formed by the few members present and I was not included in its membership, but the statement that I had, or was a party to those who preferred charges to the Illinois board is entirely false.

As I am an alumnus of the Toledo Medical college, a member of the faculty, and a member of the board of trustees, I feel very sorry to make any statement that will reflect any dishonor to the working of the college. When silence ceases to be a virture and I am compelled, much against my feelings, to speak, I am placed in an awkward position. But owing to the publicity that has been given the organization of the new society, and the charges that were made against me, I submit the following statement:

The action taken by the Alumni association is only a part of a conspiracy which manifested itself last year, and now again appears on the surface. The plan was to get rid of a number of the members of the faculty who seemed to be a hindrance to the scheme of self-aggrandizement of the conspirators. The plan was so well perfected and the conspirators felt so assured of success that Dr. W. J. Gillette declared, prefixed by an oath, that if certain members of the faculty, myself being one of them, were retained he would resign from the school, which declaration was shorn of its effect as the doctor was compelled to succumb or get out. He was not anxious to go after all.

Last summer the list of those who were to be deposed in order to favor their scheme included six members of the faculty. Their action at that time failed on account of the action taken by the students at the beginning of the term. The argument advanced against those who were to be retired was, that they were enemies of the school because they favored a consolidation with the Northwestern Ohio Medical college, which seems at this time to be the shibboleth of those who have been posing as friends of the school; see the statement which appeared in a recent issue of the daily Bee to the effect that Judge Austin appeared before the legislature of Ohio with a bill to consolidate the two schools.

This year, Austin, Gillette, et al, have discovered that consolidation with the Northwestern Ohio Medical college is the savior of the Toledo Medical college, for all of the trustees and faculty at least pretend to favor such a step.

Failing last year to oust certain members a rancorous warfare was carried on throughout the entire session to the extent that a number of the students left the school, and all the suggestions made by the so-called objectionable members were ignored by the majority. This was shown when it was insisted that better clinical and hospital facilities might be secured, and protests against the peddling of professorships throughout the city, and also the graduating of students who had not fully complied with the requirements of the school. In each of these the majority seemed to take the stand that because it was suggested by one of the so-called enemies it must be detrimental to the welfare of the school, and, consequently must be opposed. Results have shown that if these suggestions had been heeded no charges could have been preferred and sustained against the college.

As stated above, I had nothing whatever to do with the charges against the school, although I know them to be true, and had the trustees and faculty listened to the protestations of myself and others, it would have been impossible for anyone to charge crooked work.

At the meeting of the trustees and faculty last spring, when voting on the candidates for graduation the majority of both boards seemed to be intent upon ruining the reputation of the institution by graduating students who had not complied with the requirements of the college. The requirements of the school demand that each candidate for graduation shall have attended three full courses of lectures, to have read medicine for four years, and to have attended two courses of hospital clinical instruction, besides the usual laboratory courses. Of the eight who graduated last spring not more than one or two had fully complied with these requirements, and four of them had not taken the three courses required by the college. Consequently, by the action taken by the faculty and trustees in graduating these candidates the fair name of the Toledo Medical college was smirched.

In conclusion, if the nine alumni who organized the new association approve of the action taken by the present administration of the college, who are intent upon the aggrandizement of themselves or the ruination of the institution, then I am thankful that I am not counted as one of those, who by the above action have affiliated themselves with the destroyers of the good name of their alma mater.

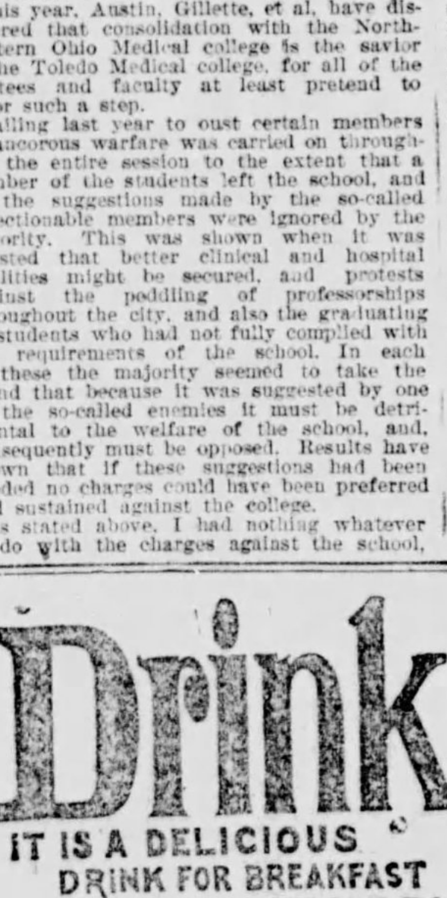
PINKHAM'S . PROVERBIAL . PHILOSOPHY . . .



A Defective Link Weakens a Strong Chain.

The female organization is a series of links, so to speak. Note the nervous irritability of one, the restlessness of another, the inability to sleep, and perhaps secret suffering. It means that a link of a chain is weakened. Those ailments are promptly overcome by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; it conquers all those weaknesses and ailments so prevalent among our women.

DEAR FRIEND OF WOMEN.—I have derived so great benefit from the use of your Vegetable Compound that I recommend it in the strongest terms. I consider it superior to any other preparation for Female Complaints.—MRS. E. A. BECK, 18 Willoughby Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y.

Druggists sell it as a standard article, or sent by mail, in form of Pills or Lozenges, on receipt of $1.00. An illustrated book, entitled "Guide to Health and Etiquette," by Lydia E. Pinkham, is of great value to ladies. We will present a copy to anyone addressing us with two 2-cent stamps.

CONGRATULATIONS NOW.

One of the Best Known Hairdressers in Boston.

Mr. Harrington Appears Before His Friends in New Role.

Time Was Not Long Ago When They Anxiously Inquired About Him.

For more than a score of years Mr. A. O. Harrington, whose place of business is 3 Congress Sq., has been known to the bankers and brokers in the State street district, says the Boston Globe.

Mr. Harrington is one of the best-known, as he is one of the most excellent barbers in the city, and his reminiscences of the prominent men of Boston who have frequented his shop would make a very interesting story. At present Mr. Harrington is receiving congratulations of his friends. For almost 10 years he has carried a cane continuously, and has frequently walked only with the aid of a crutch. It was in November last that his crutch disappeared, and soon afterwards he went about his work and walked to and from his shop without the aid of a cane. Yesterday he told a Globe reporter that he didn't expect to have to use them again.

A. O. Harrington.

"I have done more work myself since November," said Mr. Harrington, "than I had done before for two years. I'll tell you all about it. Ten years ago I began to have rheumatism, and for 10 years I suffered with it. I was laid up in bed as often as once in six weeks, and up to last September I had been attended by all kinds of physicians, had tried electricity and all manner of things, but always without any permanent relief. I could not stand on my feet long at a time, and had to leave my business principally to my men.

"In November, for the first time, I began to take Paine's celery compound. I had taken just four bottles when I was able to walk and work like a new man. I left my crutch at home and dropped my cane, and I leave it to you if I don't look like a well man."

It is not flattery to say that Mr. Harrington would never be suspected of ever having carried a crutch in his life. A year ago, as scores of prominent business men know, he was a very different looking man. He was laid up so long about that time that his friends used to anxiously inquire for him.

"To-day," said Mr. Harrington, "I am a well man, and Paine's celery compound has cured me. I freely recommend every one similaly affected to try it.

"My friends ask me what I have been doing that I am so 'smart,' and I am glad to tell them that I have been taking Paine's celery compound. A number of my customers are now taking it, on my recommendation, and it is doing them good. I shall be pleased to see any one who is suffering with rheumatism at my place of business, and shall be glad to answer their questions."

A well-known insurance man who had overheard a part of the conversation, told the Globe reporter that he remembered the day he first met Mr. Harrington last winter, walking without his cane, and remarked that he was so interested in the case that he had taken home a bottle of Paine's celery compound to a member of his own family, who had chronic rheumatism. "It has, we believe, completely cured her. We are never without it in the house."

Paine's celery compound is an honest remedy. It is not a patent medicine. It is taken by the rich and the poor. It is prescribed by physicians. Medical journals have reported time and again the cures it has effected. There has been this spring an unprecedented demand for it. As Mr. Harrington says, it is doing good.

TIRED MOTHERS.

A little elbow leans upon your knee,
Your tired knee, that has so much to bear;
A child's dear eyes are looking lovingly
From underneath a thatch of tangled hair;
Perhaps you do not heed the velvet touch
Of warm, moist fingers folding yours so tight,
You do not prize this blessing overmuch—
You almost are too tired to pray to-night!

But it is blessedness! A year ago
I did not see it as I do to-day.
We are so dull and thankless, and too slow
To catch the sunshine ere it slips away.
And now it seems surpassing strange to me
That while I wore the badge of motherhood
I did not kiss more oft and tenderly
The little child that brought me only good!

And if some night when you sat down to rest
You missed this elbow from your tired knee,
This restless, curling head from off your breast,
This lisping tongue that chatters constantly!
If from your own the dimpled hand had slipped,
And ne'er would nestle in your palm again;
If the white feet on their grave had tripped,
I could not blame you for your heartache then!

I wonders so that mothers ever fret
At little children clinging to their gown;
Or that the footprints, when the days are wet,
Are ever black enough to make them frown!
If I could find a little muddy boot,
Or cap or jacket on my chamber floor;
If I could kiss a rosy, restless foot,
And hear its patter in my house once more;

If I could mend a broken cart to-day,
To-morrow make a kite to reach the sky,
There is no woman in God's world could say
She was more blissfully content than I.
But ah! the dainty pillow next my own
Is never rumpled by a shining head;
My singing birdling from the nest is flown—
The little boy I used to kiss is dead!

WANAMAKER SPEAKS.

He Answers Mr. Leake's Sworn Statements.

Washington, D. C., June 4.—Postmaster General Wanamaker has sent a communication to Representative Henderson, of the house committee on postoffices and post roads, in answer to the sworn statement of Samuel F. Leake, in which he charges irregularities on the part of the postmaster general in connection with the pneumatic tube service of Philadelphia. The postmaster general says in part:

"I have studiously endeavored to avoid, either verbally or otherwise, any committal to any responsibility for the government. While there is no doubt you have observed the supervisor's report would precluded the acceptance of the Leake proposition, under no circumstances would I have favored the granting of a contract at the city of Philadelphia without opening it to competition by published advertisement.

"I submit also a letter of the attorney of the Pneumatic Transit company, which was unsolicited and unsuggested. I have only to add that I never heard of any government official having any interest in either of the pneumatic tube companies until a newspaper reporter called on me after the publication of the memorial which was presented to your committee."

FLORIDA DEMOCRATS.

They Succeed at Last in Naming a Ticket.

Tampa, Fla., June 4.—The democratic convention completed its permanent organization by electing Samuel J. Turnbull, of Jefferson county, first vice president, and Fred T. Myers, of Leon, second vice president.

The two-thirds rule finally prevailed by an overwhelming majority. This was another advantage for Mitchell, and his backers pressed it. R. S. Rutherford, of Marion, moved for nominations for candidate for governor. This carried and Hon. Sid L. Carter nominated Henry L. Mitchell, of Hillsboro. No other name was presented to the convention, and the nomination was made unanimous.

Judge Mitchell made a speech, declaring that there is no necessity for a third party, "as the democratic party is strong and wise enough to control our destinies." He was pronounced in favor of the free coinage of silver.

The ticket was completed as follows: R. Fenwick Taylor, of Alachua, for justice of the supreme court; John L. Crawford, for secretary of state; W. B. Lamar, of Jefferson, for attorney-general; and W. B. Bloxham, of Leon, for auditor, were all renominated unanimously by acclamation.

C. D. Collins was nominated for state treasurer; L. N. Sheats for superintendent of public instruction; L. B. Wornbuell, for commissioner of agriculture.

The only new men in the state nominations are Sheats and Collins. The latter is a very prominent alliance man. Both had the solid support of the alliance. Following are the national electors: For the state at large, T. Shackleford and B. B. Blackwell, and for the First congressional district A. F. Maxwell; Second district, W. N. Thompson.

BAD SKIN ERUPTION

Many Years—All Manner of Medicines and Doctors Fail—Cured in One Month By Cuticura.

In 1885 I had an eruption come out on my skin, and while at first it did not amount to much, it grew to be very aggravating and at times unbearable. The skin would get hard, inflamed, and peel off, leaving an entire new skin, acting same way for weeks at a time, always worse at nights. Have tried all manner of medicines and had doctors prescribe to no effect. I bought a box of CUTICURA REMEDIES and used CUTICURA RESOLVENT for my blood. I am fully cured, and in less than a month. It was a most aggravating skin disease, and now I am enjoying ease and comfort. I have had untold benefits. Anyone trying CUTICURA REMEDIES cannot help but derive benefit. Anyone writing me will receive an answer and my advice to give your REMEDIES a trial.

Doctor Uses Cuticura.

We have opened a drug store at this place and are having a splendid sale on CUTICURA REMEDIES, which we keep a full stock of. I would not be without your CUTICURA RESOLVENT, CUTICURA, and CUTICURA SOAP for $500, just for the benefit it did my little boy. When he was six months old, his face was covered with eczema, and CUTICURA REMEDIES cured it. He is now three years old. We still use the CUTICURA SOAP, and wash him occasionally with it, to prevent his skin from getting rough. We have handled your medicines for five years, and never heard a complaint against them, but abundant praise. We sold our drug store in Kansas, and will continue in the drug business here.

OUT ALL NIGHT.

The Jury in the Base Ball Case Won't Agree.

Byron Ritchie's Base Ball Oration to the Box—A Case that is Exciting General Interest.

"I have made up my mind that they ought to play ball on Sunday," said T. D. Parker, who was drawn as a juror in the case against the Sunday base ball players, which came up in police court yesterday afternoon for trial.

The speaker didn't strike Prosecuting Attorney Wheeler as a man who would do the complaint much good, so a challenge for cause was submitted, and Mr. Parker smilingly stepped down and out.

A number of gentlemen were excused for one reason and another until both sides were satisfied with the following jury: Goe. W. Stough, Chas. McCune, James Mattimore, Alex E. Foster, Henry E. Davis, James Gilroy, Frank Cunningham, Frank Templeton, James J. Murphy, T. H. Barkdull, James A. Faskins and Fred Adams.

The testimony of the official scorer, the detectives and Chief Raitz was taken.

To the official scorer, Ed White, Mr. Ritchie put the question: "Now, at the time this thing took place—I don't know what it was, but will show that later—did you see Mr. Gunnels play at this thing?"

"No."

"Did Mr. Gunnels appear on the diamond before the game was stopped?"

"No."

"You heard him speak to the crowd, asking them to be quiet, at the time of the arrest. Now, is that playing ball?"

"Decidedly not."

"I thought not," said Mr. Ritchie. "If it was I'd be one of the greatest ball players living."

"What constitutes a game of ball?" was the next question put.

"Nine innings."

"And nine innings were not played."

"They were not."

"Then they only played at base ball."

"That's right. They only played at it."

Detective Nichter got a little mixed in his dates under the volley of interrogation points fired by Mr. Ritchie. One question was "Do you know O'Rourke?"

"I do."

"Of the Toledo club, eh?"

"Yes."

"You saw him play with the Toledos before you arrested him?"

"Yes."

"Oh yes, you saw him play with the Toledo's." Mr. Ritchie was having fun.

At the conclusion of the testimony, Byron Ritchie, the attorney for the ball players, addressed the jury as follows:

"I stand here, not the advocate of six or seven preachers, but I stand for the ball players. I have respect for religion, but it is a sorry day for the Christian religion when it resorts to fanatacism of this kind to prop it up. I say this crusade is wrong. Who asks that Sunday ball be stopped? Who asks it, I repeat? Chief Raitz has testified that it was a few preachers. They object to Thomas Nicholson or any other ball player earning his bread on the Sabbath day, when the preachers themselves carry on their own business and draw their salaries for their Sunday work. The business of both parties is innocent and harmless, but is it right for one to deny the other the privilege of earning his living in a harmless way? The game of base ball—what is it? An enjoyable pastime, improving the body of the player and entertaining the on-looker. What is the harm? Who does it hurt? It gives pleasure, amusement and health. Eight thousand people who have toiled all week take an outing Sunday and rest their bodies and minds. Would you deny the 15,000 workingmen in Toledo a little pleasure? Would you rob him of his right on the Sabbath to allow a little sunshine to gleam through upon a life of toil? Why not stop other Sunday amusements? Our good friends, the preachers, haven't said anything about Sunday steamboat excursions, those floating houses of ill-fame, of Sunday resorts where beer flows freely, where sons are made drunkards and daughters prostitutes. What of them? They have closed the saloons—" and here Mr. Ritchie winked the other eye—"they have closed the saloons. I say, and now they would close base ball, at a place where there is no drinking, no gambling, no rowdyism, nothing but pure innocent fun.

"This is a nice business for a clergyman to be in who draws his salary from the Finlay Brewing company. Where is the consistency?

"What is a game of base ball? We are told by authorities that it consists of nine innings. Here is a point. Only eight innings were played. It was not a game of base ball. With public opinion as it is, all a jury wants is a bridge to a verdict of not guilty.

"They have tried to show that Mr. Gunnels is guilty of playing ball on Sunday. There is no evidence that he was playing ball.

"This crusade is condemned by public opinion, and here and now is the time to set upon it the seal of your emphatic and determined condemnation."

Prosecuting Attorney Wheeler then took the floor. "I have shown," he said, "that ball was played on the Sunday in question; that Mr. Gunnels is the manager of the club. The evidence is sufficient to convict them. You went into the box promising to give a verdict in accordance with the law and evidence. I have nothing more to say, only that I feel that you see your duty and will perform it."

The judge then charged the jury and at 5:30 o'clock it went out.

Up to the time of going to press the jury had not returned a verdict, and it don't look as if they would. They are too far apart in their opinions. In all probability they will disagree. The jurymen had a sleepless night, but the time was put in with cards and a social session. They were sitting around in their room this morning doing nothing and saying nothing, but each side determined.

WANT OF CONFIDENCE.

Ottawa, Ont., June 4.—The members of parliament, the friends of home rule, representing both political parties, held a private meeting and discussed Mr. Devlen's home rule resolution. It is understood that it was decided to drop it as its defeat at the present time would be injurious to the cause. Those present passed a resolution, however, of want of confidence in Lord Salisbury's government and urged that assistance be rendered to the liberal opposition in the mother country to obtain power.

The regular meeting of the Ys was held at St. Paul's church yesterday afternoon, Mrs. Elery Eaton presiding. Mrs. Ensign, state superintendent, extended an invitation to the Y's of Toledo to attend the Northwestern conference to be held at North Baltimore. Much credit is due Miss Blakesley and her assistants, Misses Thomson and Corbett, for this excellent work. At the close of the program the little ones were presented with boquets. The time and place of the next meeting will be announced later.

TO USE DYNAMITE.

A Big Sensation Unearthed in Chicago.

Believed That an Attempt Was Being Made to Blow Up a Boiler Factory.

Chicago, June 4.—The Times contains a startling story to the effect that striking workmen have, by accident, been frustrated in their attempt to blow up the McGregor boiler factory, by a mine of dynamite.

The plan which the police say they have discovered, shows as great a disregard for human life as that displayed by the anarchists of Paris.

According to the report, wires have been found connecting the plant with an electric battery and a quantity of the deadly explosive. The plot seems to have been deeply laid, from the information which has come into the hands of the authorities.

Three weeks ago three men took rooms in the house at the opposite corner of the street intersection from that occupied by the boiler works. Early yesterday morning a similar trio were found in the vacant lot adjoining the factory by an officer. Though suspicious looking, they were permitted to depart unmolested, but further investigation showed the existence of twin copper wires running along the curbstone of the sidewalk and a telegraph pole at its end.

A large coil of wire was also found lying near the pole, and a box containing a battery of 21 cells in the rooms occupied by them at No. 102 Francisco street.

Until the discovery of the dynamite in the house later in the day it was supposed the tenants had intended to make money by procuring early information on the racing at Garfield park track.

But the find of the explosive recalled the fact that a second telegraph pole stands immediately behind the factory, and that nothing was simpler, when once the wire was connected with that on the pole, than to explode a charge against the wall of the boiler works. The three men, the landlady of the house they occupied says, brought with them a large packing case which they declared contained dishes.

An examination of its contents by the detectives revealed 21 jars of electric battery, while in a remote closet of the men's bedroom was found a large package of dynamite.

Mr. Wm. McGregor, the head of the factory firm, says his non-union men have been threatened with violence since the strike on May 1. No arrests have been made, but sensational developments are promised.

HOTEL VICTORY.

Put-in-Bay, O., June 4.—(Special)—Work on Hotel Victory at Put-in-Bay is being pushed rapidly, and has now progressed so far that there is no guess-work whatever about opening every part of the institution on June 30. The hotel building is undergoing a wonderful transformation under the hand of the finisher and furnisher, and every room will be ready for business on the opening. Manager Weaver has organized his entire staff of employes from the best talent available, and everything needed for the hotel has been bought and shipped. The electric railroad is being pushed to completion under the direction of Mr. Atwood. Arbuckle & Ryan are putting the power station in readiness rapidly, Haughton & Co. are putting the finishing touches on the large elevators, Locke & Shultz have about finished the plumbing, and Shaw, Kendall & Co. the steam fitting. The island fairly swarms with workmen, and many of Toledo's best carpenters are here at work on the interior.

FRANCE MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE,

38 & 40 W. Gay St., one block N. of State House, Columbus, O. Incorporated, 1886. Capital, $300,000.

DRS. FRANCE AND OTTMAN, of New York, the well known and successful Specialists in Chronic Diseases and Diseases of the Eye and Ear, on account of their large practice in Ohio, have established the FRANCE MEDICAL INSTITUTE, where all forms of Chronic, Nervous and Private Diseases will be successfully treated on the most Scientific principles. They are ably assisted by a full corps of eminent Physicians and Surgeons, each one being a well known specialist in his profession

CANCER positively cured without pain or use of the knife, by a new method.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES.—DR. FRANCE, after years of experience, has discovered the greatest cure known for all diseases peculiar to the sex. Female diseases positively cured by the new remedy, OLIVE BLOSSOM. The cure is effected by home treatment. Entirely harmless and easily applied. Consultation Free and Strictly Confidential. Correspondence promptly answered.

YOUNG MEN—Who have become victims of solitary vice, that dreadful and destructive habit, which annually sweeps to an untimely grave thousands of young men of exalted talent and brilliant intellect, may call with confidence.

DRS. FRANCE AND OTTMAN, after years of experience, have discovered the greatest cure known for weakness in the back and limbs, involuntary discharges, impotency, general debility, nervousness, languor, confusion of ideas, palpitation of the heart, timidity, trembling, dimness of sight, or giddiness, diseases of the head, throat, nose, or skin, affections of the liver, lungs, stomach, or bowels—those terrible disorders arising from the solitary vice of youth—and secret practices, blighting their most radiant hopes or anticipations, rendering marriage impossible. Take one candid thought before it is too late. A week or month may place your case beyond the reach of hope. Our method of treatment will speedily and permanently cure the most obstinate case, and absolutely restore perfect manhood.

TO MIDDLE-AGED MEN.—There are many from the age of 30 to 60 who are troubled with frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight burning or smarting sensation, weakening the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examination of the urinary deposits, a ropy sediment will be found, or the color will be a thin or milkish hue. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause, which is a second stage of seminal weakness. We will guarantee a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

DISEASES OF WOMEN.—We have a special department, thoroughly organized, and devoted exclusively to the treatment of diseases of women. Every case consulting our specialists, whether by letter or in person, is given the most careful and considerate attention. Important cases (and we get few which have not baffled the skill of all the home physicians) have the benefit of a full council of skilled specialists. In treatment of diseases peculiar to females, our success has been marked, over two-thirds of our patients being ladies, old, young, married, single, rich and poor. Our method is entirely free from objectionable features of the general practitioner, namely, "Local treatment." We seldom find it necessary. We prepare remedies, constitutional and local, as the case demands, and instruct ladies how to treat themselves.

MARRIAGE.—Married persons, or young men contemplating marriage, aware of physical weakness, loss of procreative powers, impotency, or any other disqualification, speedily restored.

PRIVATE DISEASES.—Blood Poison, Venereal Taint, Gleet, Stricture, Seminal Emissions, Loss of Sexual Power, Weakness of Sexual Organs, Want of Desire in Male or Female, whether from imprudent habits of youth or sexual habits of mature years, or any cause that debilitates the sexual functions, speedily and permanently cured. Consultation free and strictly confidential. Absolute cures guaranteed. Medicines sent free from observation to all parts of the United States.

EPILEPSY, OR FITS—Positively cured by a new and never-failing method. Testimonials furnished.

WONDERFUL CURES Perfected in old cases which have been neglected or unskillfully treated. No experiments or failures. Parties treated by mail or express, but where possible, personal consultation is preferred. Curable cases guaranteed. No risks incurred.

The wheat markets on this side of the Atlantic have been higher, strong and quite steady at the advance. It remains a crop scare market with some reliance on over sold conditions for aid to support the prices. The strong corn market also gives wheat some strength. The advance to-day has been 1-2c in New York, and on July in Chicago about 1c.

Corn is again decidedly higher. July about 2 to 2 1-4c up. Oats are higher, east and west.

London and Paris markets closed higher for wheat and flour.

In New York June and July wheat closed 1-2c up. June corn 2c and July 1 7-8c up. June oats 5-8c up.

In Chicago June wheat closed 1-8c and July 3-4c higher. Juen corn 1 1-4c and July 2 1-4c higher.

was not maintained, and after some fluctuations closed about 5-8c higher on July and August, and 1-2c lower on June and cash wheat. On the call June sold at 95c, July at 91c, and August at 88 4c. After the call June sold at 95 1-4@94 1-4c; July sold at 91 1-8c, and closed at 90 1-4c; August sold at 89c, and closed at 88 3-4c.

Cash wheat was in fair request. No. 2 soft sold at 95 1-4@94 1-4c; No. 3 soft at 92c; rejected No. 2 at 82c; wheat and rye, 80c.

Corn was more active; No. 2 at 54c; July, 52@53 1-2c; No. 3 at 52c; No. 4 at 47 1-2c.

Rye—No. 2 at 82c; rejected at 75c.

Nothing doing in oats. Prices much higher to buy or sell.

The receipts of wheat to-day at Minneapolis and Duluth are 301,650 bu and at five other western point 76,904 bu.

The receipts of grain this week at eight principal western points are wheat 2,584,000 bu, corn 2,707,000 bu, oats 2,150,000 bu. Previous week wheat 1,890,000 bu, corn 1,222,000 bu, oats 1,578,000 bu.

In the week corresponding to this in 1891 the receipts were wheat 2,044,000 bu, corn 3,293,000 bu, oats 2,409,000 bu, showing a gain this week over 1891 in wheat of 540,000 bu, a decrease in corn of 586,000 bu, and oats 259,000 bu.

The export clearances yesterday from four Atlantic ports were wheat 666,210 bu and flour to an aggregate of 950,000 bu. Export of corn 18,525 bu and of oats 42,956 bu.

The exports for the week from the same ports were wheat 2,423,000 bu, corn 548,000 bu, oats 132,000 bu.

Bradstreets gives the exports in a week from both coasts 2,891,000 bu. Montreal exported 800,000 bu not included in above. Figures indicate an exportation for the year ending June 30, flour and wheat, of 227,000,000 bu, or 40,000,000 bu more than in any previous year.

Prim's crop report says that "no progress in planting has been made in the past week; wheat is rusting and corn rotting in the ground in some places.

He estimates the corn planting so far at 65 per cent.

A distinguished New York house writes as follows: "Spring wheat is neglected and reports, somewhat sensational we believe, regarding the condition of spring wheat in store, adds to the depression. There is a swinging demand for No. 2 red, particularly choice grades, and all that comes on the market seems to be readily taken, buyers all the time protesting that they are working without profit. Our previous advice that all that can be got here up to the time foreign countries raise their own, will be wanted, is to our mind verified. Our friends may, therefore, look for earnest buyers for some time after the new crop appears, hence we feel very bullish on No. 2 red in the west, up to August at least.

The above is believed to show the true inwardness of the market situation, a condition that will continue to the end of the crop year. Nothing is more likely to our mind. The crop of wheat in this country and abroad promises a late harvest and a large increase in consumption. Dealers must decide for themselves what effect this will likely produce on prices, considering our alleged remainder of our surplus from the crop of 1891.

The State of Trade.

New York, June 4.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: The tone of commercial reports from various parts of the country indicate that business has to some extent improved. Collections throughout the country are better, and excepting the bursting of a speculative corner at Chicago, there has been no especial excitement of any kind in business. The fictitious price established for corn at Chicago lasted just long enough to bring into that market enough of the actual grain to bury the speculators, and the corner broke with great losses, not merely to the operators, but also to the brokers.

Wheat has declined half a cent; the western receipts were unusually large, though eastern exports have been also quite large. Oats are a shade lower, pork products unchanged, and oil a little lower. The stock of cotton in the country continues far beyond the record of previous years, and there is every reason to believe that even a great reduction in the yield will scarcely reduce the aggregate supply for the year below the quantity usually required for consumption.

Both at Pittsburg and Philadelphia pig iron is weaker, and there are doubts whether the bottom has been reached, though at Chicago the market is considerably stronger, and authorities hold that the stocks of pig iron in the country are now considerably lower than they have been. The market for bars is weak at the lowest figures ever known, and the new demand for structural iron is not quite as large as has been expected. The market for copper has been quiet, and the bulls have controlled the price, but lead has been sluggish.

Quiet prevails in the anthracite coal market, the companies having decided upon another advance in prices, which the conditions of the market does not appear to warrant.

There is little new in the wool market or in the woolen manufacture, though the tone is somewhat firmer.

The treasury has been reducing its balance during the past month, paying out more money than it has taken in, and in some quarters attention is called to the fact that its cash balances are lower than at any other time since the resumption of specie payments. But the supply of money abroad is so abundant and the demand in foreign countries so moderate, that it seems somewhat improbable that the drain from this country will be large at any time this season.

Business failures occurring throughout the country during the last seven days number 207, as compared with totals of 508 last week. For the corresponding week of last year the figures were 224.

Bradstreet's Review.

New York, June 4.—Bradstreet's review of the New York stock market follows:

Very little need be said of the actual share market during the week. But for the continuance of professional manipulation and of arbitage dealings between New York and London, as well as with minor American markets, the stagnation might be described as complete. The only interest is derived from the steady efforts of bear operators to depress the prices of particular stocks. The unsatisfactory condition of exchange and the necessity which it imposes on bankers of shipping gold to supply material for fresh drawings, furnished the chief argument for lower prices. Europe will not buy our stocks and bonds and thus supply the exchange market with bills. Wall street, in fact, has for the present practically abandoned hopes of a revival of bullish feeling in Americans abroad. The shipment of $1,500,000 gold this week was therefore expected and served as notice that if Europe is no longer inclined to offer a premium for our gold it is because it can be drawn away by natural processes. The feeling, in fact, is that the western and southern railroads are likely to experience a year of light traffic and this idea has a powerful influence upon speculation. That the depression in prices was not more marked seems due more than anything else to the narrowness of the market and the obstinacy with which the owners of stocks refuse, under the existing ease of money, to be shaken out of them. The facility with which the trading followers of the bear party oversell and are forced to cover their shorts has, indeed, furnished a certain amount of support and caused a number of quick rallies. What promised to be the important move of the week, an attack of Reading and the other coal stocks based on the application in New Jersey for an injunction against the combine and the leases, proved mainly for this reason a flat failure. One of the features was the increased interest shown in the industrial stocks as a class, some of which advanced sharply on good buying, based on the belief that they are free from the uncertainty which under present circumstances attaches to railroad securities. Manipulative assistance was, of course, apparent in this group.

The Flour Output.

Minneapolis, Minn., June 4.—The Northwestern Miller says: The flour output last week was among the largest ever made, an aggregate of 198,700 bbls., against 149,890 bbls the previous week, 128,280 bbls for the corresponding time in 1891 and 1892, and 770 bbls. in 1890. The direct exports last week were 54,980 bbls, against 77,550 bbls the preceding week. Mills to the number of 112 with daily capacity of 108,450 bbls. for the week ending May 28, made 107,609 bbls flour against 593,325 bbls the week before.

SOLE AGENTS.

BOARDMAN & GRAY PIANOS

ESTABLISHED 1837.

Sold continuously since 1870 at 219 Summit Street.

This make, sold in large numbers for more than 21 years by a reliable house, recommended and indorsed by nearly all of the best musicians and teachers in Toledo, has become a formidable barrier to the sale of other first-class pianos offered by competing dealers and their agents, by reason of their constantly increasing sale and popularity. Competitors, alarmed and uneasy, resort to many unreasonable as well as untrue statements, which they work off on confiding individuals, and cause them to be circulated in this city and elsewhere. Among these old chestnuts, is the statement that "The Whitney & Currier company manufacture the Boardman & Gray, or have a proprietary interest in their manufacture, and are actuated by that interest, to praise their merit and push their sale." The first part of this statement is untrue. This company has no proprietary interest in the manufacture of any piano. It is actuated in recommending the Boardman & Gray piano by the same motives which actuate any honest individual in recommending that which he knows to be of superior merit, and also by the same motives any one would have in pushing the sale of any successful meritorious article in which a reasonable profit may be realized, and that which is true of Boardman & Gray in this respect, is true of other makes this company has for sale. The superior facilities the Whitney & Currier company has in purchasing, enable it to give greater value for a like sum of money than can be had of its competitors. No other house can show an equal line of first-class Pianos, nor the number from which to select in making a purchase. All are invited to call and see for themselves, whether wishing to buy or not.

THE WHITNEY & CURRIER CO.,
219 Summit street.

Why Should Piano Dealers and Their Agents Go Out of Their Way to Decry the Superior Merits of the Boardman & Gray Pianos? The Reason Is Obvious.

will be paid for a recipe enabling us to make WOLFF'S ACME BLACKING at such a price that the retailer can profitably sell it at 10c. a bottle. At present the retail price is 20c.

This offer is open until January 1st., 1893. For particulars address the undersigned.

ACME BLACKING is made of pure alcohol, other liquid dressings are made of water. Water costs nothing. Alcohol is dear. Who can show us how to make it without alcohol so that we can make ACME BLACKING as cheap as water dressing, or put it in fancy packages like many of the water dressings, and then charge for the outside appearance instead of charging for the contents of the bottle?

WOLFF & RANDOLPH, Philadelphia.

PIK-RON

is the name of a paint of which a 25c. bottle is enough to make six scratched and dulled cherry chairs look like newly finished mahoganies. It will do many other remarkable things which no other paint can do.
All retailers sell it.

Bogus White Lead and adulterated paints would have no sale did they not afford dealers a larger profit than

Strictly
Pure White Lead

The man who best guards his own interests is never persuaded to buy paint that is said to be "just as good," or "better," than Strictly Pure White Lead. The following brands are standard and always strictly pure:

ANCHOR (Cincinnati)
ARMSTRONG & McKELVY (Pittsburgh)
BEYMER-BAUMAN (Pittsburgh)
COLLIER (St. Louis)
CORNELL (Buffalo)
DAVIS-CHAMBERS (Pittsburgh)

THE CLASS OF '92

Before Stepping Out Into the World

Enjoy Another Gathering as Pupils and Participate in a Banquet and Class Day Exercises.

There was plenty of enjoyment last evening; it was there in profusion—in case lots: it beamed on the faces of everybody, glanced from the glistening china, vied the lights in brilliancy, circulated, percolated, everywhere and saturated everything. It was analyzed by the devotees of botany, synthetized by the chemistry class, eulogized by the orators, gathered in big chunks by the geologists and distributed-generally to those present at the banquet and class day exercises of the High School class of '92 at Grand Army hall last evening. The banquet was a grand affair. There were four tables, loaded with everything to tickle the palate, and presided over by the young ladies of the cooking class of '92. Following the feast came the flow of soul. The class history, telling the story of the aims, battles, struggles and victories participated in by the members of the class, was read by Miss Edith Coder.

The class prophecy by Fill Carr was very amusing, and the poem by Miss Gertrude Knights excellent. The toasts followed, Miss Lalla Miller responding to Our Alma Mater; Miss Mercy Chapin to the Evolution of the Ragged Boy, a toast written by Miss Gertie Weed, who was too ill to be present; Walter Munroe to the Evolution of the Girl, and Herbert Cheney to that most important toast, the question "What's Next?"

Then followed informal talks as they were called for. Suprintendent Compton, Prof. Adams, Prof. Ogden, Prof. Richmond, Miss Sophie Mery, Miss Dunlap, Miss Hitchcock, Miss Petit, Miss Harnit, Prof. Mills and Percy Howe responded.

Ralph Collamore, the president of the class, acted as master of ceremonies, and filled the position like an old hand, making pithy points here, witty hits there, and dispensing humor everywhere.

The grand finale was the singing of America by those assembled. It was a grand success throughout, and the members of the class, the teachers and all who were present will remember it as one of the most pleasant events in a long and congenial acquaintanceship.

Catawba Island is generally spoken of as an immense fruit garden, and comparatively few people know of it as a delightful summer resort, but under the hospitable roof of the "Lakeview House," owned and managed by Mr. J. W. Gamble, life is indeed worth living. Here one has all the comforts of home, with fresh air, plenty of fishing, pleasant companionship, and the most charming view of old Lake Erie that is to be found anywhere; while the knowledge that here is indeed rest and relaxation from the vexations of a busy existence does much to bring back the roses and harden the muscles. As a family resort it is unequalled, being reasonable in rates and unpretentious in its appointments, and we would advise those who are contemplating a little outing to remember the "Lakeview House" of Catawba Island.

"S'MORE SMEAD SYSTEM."

"The Board of Education Votes it Into Two More Schools," is the heading to the proceedings of the Detroit school board's meeting as recounted by the Free Press; and the Chagrin Falls, O., Exponent, announces the following:

"Heating System Adopted.

"The board of education met Thursday evening in special session. After disposing of minor matters the board unanimously adopted the Smead system of heating and ventilating for the new school building which is to be erected this season."

GATHERING OF THE CLANS.

Delegates, newspaper men and admiring friends are gathering in the twin cities, where next week the republicans will pick out their standard bearer. So far as the voters of this city are concerned, the prevailing opinion is that John Dalber can put up a suit of clothes that will please the most critical politician, or the most fastidious business or professional man. John has the finest stock of suitings, and his prices are always just right.

OUR ISLAND RESORTS.

At this season of the year, when all nature is looking at its best, and when the city folk are desirous of transporting themselves to a more pleasureable and healthful clime—it is at this time, then, that the beauties of our own islands, so near to Toledo and the surrounding country, come up before us in all their grandeur.

There is Put-in-Bay, Middle Bass, Kelley's and Catawba Islands, all easy of access by boat from our own and neighboring cities.

Of the first mentioned island resort there can be but a repetition in words of what has many times before been said—that nature seems to have designed Put-in-Bay for the very purpose it is now serving, the great and ever popular summer resort of the central and southern states.

The climate of the island is peculialy adapted to health and comfort. No dews fall, and the dry pure air is strangely beneficial to invalids, especially those suffering from bronchial or lung diseases.

While it is a well-established fact that there are no better fishing grounds in Lake Erie than around Put-in-Bay. Fish resort to the shores and shoals, and hence the great popularity of these islands. Hundreds of guests resort here in the spring and fall to enjoy the pleasant sport of catching black bass, which is the game fish of the lake. The island also affords many pleasant drives through beautiful vineyards, groves and along its shores. And as to accommodations for the guests that frequent summer resorts, there are few people who speak of Put-in-Bay but what associate with it the Beebe house, which has for many years been under the management of H. Beebe & Son.

This season extensive and modern improvements have been made, electric call bells in every room, new cottages erected, and it now has comfortable accommodation for 400 guests. The rooms are large and airy, and all lighted by gas. The offices and dining room are spacious, the latter can seat 400 guests. The cuisine needs no recommendation to former patrons, and it is sufficient to say that the reputation of the house will be sustained in this respect.

The location, with the lake only a few feet in front, a splendid grove on the left, the only bathing beach on the island but a short distance in the rear, is one that is not equalled by any other hotel on the island. The chief charm of the house is, however, its home-like comfort and elegance—two things so seldom found at watering-place hotels—and guests may be assured that they will receive every attention that will make their stay pleasant and agreeable in every respect.

A fine orchestra is in constant attendance, and good physicians are established upon the island.

Taken all in all, it is a most agreeable place to spend the summer months.

AMERICA LOSES

By Blaine's Great Reciprocity Scheme.

It Has Already Caused Much Damage.

Fewer Ships Fly the Stars and Stripes.

How the Plan Works in Actual Business.

British Tramp Steamers and English Seamen Seem to Reap the Greatest Benefit—Some Cold Facts.

New York, June 4.—The Blaine reciprocity scheme, and the mail subsidy act, are now beginning to bear fruit. These two measures were hailed by republican statesmen with the beating of ton-toms. They were greeted as the first robins of commercial spring. The first one would excite a languid foreign taste for our pork and Johnny cake.

The second would breed American ships. It would drive the British Jack off the sea, with a flutter of the stars and stripes, to the quickstep strains of "Yankee Doodle."

Both are rich of promise. And it may be too early now to insist on measurements and specifications. Some measure of respect is due to good intentions.

The consumers of Venezuela tax themselves when they wish to import our products. And not to b eout-done in reciprocity, when we want Venezuela coffee we tax our appetite three cents a pound.

This is the Blaine plan, its workings are thus explained in the News of this city:

If Venezuela can afford to tax herself, why shouldn't the United States enjoy the same luxury? Formerly, before this Blaine tax was imposed on Venezuela coffee and hides, by a Harrison proclamation, the American line of ships known as the "Red D," delivered from 10,000 to 25,000 bags of coffee to American coffee drinkers in each cargo.

Now, this coffee cannot be landed here, against the free coffee of Brazil and Java, except in bond in the government warehouse in Brooklyn. Most of it is exported direct from the steamer to Canada or Europe. The coffee which is stored in bonded warehouses is in time withdrawn when sold to customers outside of the United States.

Therefore, if you should crave for Venezuela coffee, you must first pay Uncle Sam a tax, or use the Java or Rio article, which is admitted free. You will observe that if the people of Rio and Java should blindly tax themselves for our farm products or shop goods, we should be compelled by the wisdom of our plan of reciprocity, to reciprocate by taxing our own breakfast coffee.

We could hardly afford to be outdone in this particular by either Brazil or Java!

Here we perceive three effects flowing form one good cause. First, we punish the American appetite for Venezuela coffee by taxing it 3 cents a pound. Second, we punish the American Red D Steamship company by reducing its cargoes to mere running expenses. And third, we reduce American exports to Venezuela, because when we bought largely of Venezuela hides and coffee, now that we cannot buy anything of course it follows that there is a falling off.

Red D people contend that President Harrison used his optional powers respecting Venezuela as a club to brain a distinct American industry. They say that if he had deferred the matter until peace was assured in Venezuela that either the present government or the revolutionists, if successful, would have entered into a commercial treaty with the United States.

Some notion of the deadly effect of the Harrison proclamation on the business of the Red D line may be gleaned from this: That on a recent trip of one of their steamers a consignment of 3,000 bags of coffee exported direct to Hamburg, left the company a profit of $50.

The American flag also droops in another quarter.

The Brazilian Mail Steamship company have chartered since October last a dozen British steamers.

The Glengoil and the Capulet arrived from Rio and Santos, and the Chilean in ballast, from Glasgow this month.

But while these tramp Britishers are coming and going between Brooklyn and Brazil, the regular American made ships, that fly the stars and stripes, are hauled off. Of the five regular ships the Allianca and the Advance are laid up in "Rotten Row" at the Erie Basin. The reason alleged is the need of repairs; but no sign of preparation have yet been observed.

A News reporter found along shore in Brooklyn, at Bartlett's North Stores and vicinity, a deal of speculation about the displacement of the American eagle by the British Lion.

As a matter of patriotism some people didn't relish it.

But as a matter of dollars and cents the company is disposed to let the eagle scream.

The chartering of so many British tramps show that there is something going back and forth between New York and Rio. Every steamer leaves Roberts' Stores almost in a sinking condition from the surfeit of outward cargo.

There is understood to be a vast difference between the expenses and profits of the American ships and those of the British.

The tramps have all the room aboard, aside from that for engines and coal, for cargo.

There is no steward's department. This alone on the Finance or Seguranca adds to the expenses of a round trip to Brazil nearly $5,000. A chief steward on the Allianca gets more wages than the captain of an English tramp. The American captain has a salary of $200 to $250 per month. The Britisher is lucky if he gets "15 pun," or $75.

It is said that each tramp earns for the Brazilian company $25,000 a round trip.

Of the tramps named the Capulet arrived the 20th, with coffee, and is loading for Rio at Roberts' pier. The Glengoil steamed from New York to Rio in 23 days and returned in 27, with 10,000 bags of coffee.

She can carry 50,000 bags.

The Seguranca arrived May 6, and will not sail till June 6. The Finance is on her way home and will arrive about June 15. The Vigilancia sailed April 25 and is outward bound.

These two are the only steamers carrying the American flag on the sea between this port and Rio.

CANADA CANAL SYSTEM.

Capitalists Interested and a Gigantc Project is Declared Feasible.

Toronto, Ontario, June 4.—Recent action in Washington looking to an enlargment of the American canal system seems to have had the effect of urging Canadians to increase their advantages in competing for the immense traffic of the lakes. A strong company of Canadian capitalists has been formed here to carry out the plan of building a big ship railway to connect Lakes Huron and Ontario.

The company has secured the services of E. L. Corthell, a Chicago engineer, well known in connection with the Tehauntepec ship railway, and he has this week reported favorably on the practicability of the proposed railway. The route of sixty-six miles from Toronto to Collingwood on Georgian Bay is, he says, well adapted for a railway, affording natural advantages for carrying out the work. He is now satisfied from his examination of the country, made this week, that a railway can be constructed for between $15,000,000 and $16,000,000 capable of conveying vessels of 5,000 tons between the two lakes.

He is convinced that the building of the railway will compel an enlargment of the St. Lawrence Canal, and says it is utterly impossible to provide for the vast commerce of lakes by any possible enlargement of the Erie Canal. He is equally convinced that the best and cheapest course to the seaboard is by the St. Lawrence route, of which the railway will be an essential part. Probably the Dominion and Ontario governments will grant subsidies for the work, and the managing director of the company will go to England to try to raise money there.

SHUT OUT

Are American Students from Foreign Shipyards.

They Can No Longer Study Naval Architecture in European Yards.

Washington, June 4.—The foreign shipyards have shut down on the American constructor, and hereafter the United States official who is in search of information must content himself with looking through the hole in the fence.

The intimation that no more naval constructors or representatives of American warship builders would be welcome at some of the dockyards of Europe reached the navy department months ago, but the matter has been kept quiet, as one which did not concern anybody and one that

It stirred up the society of draughtsmen, which has its headquarters in this city, and has a membership all over the country, to insist that draughtsmen employed at the government yards and in the departments should be at least citizens of this country.

The decision against Americans started the movement, and now what was once possible, and more than once practiced, of sending English draughtsmen to this country and have them make a tour of the yards of the United States and then return home, is impossible.

It has made a great change in the program of fitting young men for the constructor's corps of the navy, as is seen in the orders recently issued assigning the cadets who were studying abroad for practical instruction at the navy yards of this country.

Hitherto these students visited the dockyards of France and England before the term at Glasgow and Paris. This can be done no longer, and the young men sent out by the navy department for instruction in naval architecture in Europe must be content with a technical education in the universities and a practical experience at the navy yards at home.

IMPROVED ROADS.

The Attention Which the French Government Gives to Highways.

In a recent paper read before an English engineering society, the writer furnishes valuable data concerning road making in France—a subject of particular interest at this time, in view of the attention being paid to improved highways in the United States.

The French roads are divided into three main classes: National roads, comprising those built principally for military purposes, the entire cost of construction and maintenance being born by the government; department roads, built to connect the principal cities, and designed and paid for by each department as a whole; and country roads, built and maintained by the communes through which they run. Since the advent of the railroad the country roads have become the most important, their aggregate length being about 308,000 miles, while the length of each of the other divisions is about 24,000 miles. All the roads are carefully inspected by engineers, who direct the necessary repairs to be made.

The macadamized road without a foundation is said to be preferred to the Telford, which has been abandoned, but a binder is added to the broken stone after the later has been thoroughly compacted. The cost of the different roads has averaged as follows: National roads, first cost per mile $10,000, annual maintenance per mile $230; department roads, $6,500 for first cost and $160 for maintenance; country roads, $2,700 for first cost and $80 a year for maintenance. The higher cost of the national roads is due largely to the fact that they were constructed for strategic purposes, and traverse the roughest and most scantily populated districts. Their width is also greater.

GERMAN VILLAGE.

The German "village," for which the exposition authorities granted a concession some time ago, will occupy a space of 225 by 780 feet on Midway Plaisance. The features of the exhibit are a medieval German town, with a market place and town hall, which will contain the German ethnographic museum. Around the town will be farmhouses from different sections of the German empire occupied by natives. In a medieval German castle there will be a restaurant presided over by caterers from Berlin. Another interesting feature of the town will be an ancient monastery establishment. Then there will be large concert gardens, in which about 8,000 people can sit at tables, while two German bands will play. The construction work has been in progress for several weeks at Frankfort-on-the-Main. The contractors are Phillip Holzmann & Co., the builders of the imperial palace at Strassburg and many other celebrated structures in Germany.

TO WHOM.

She was a spectacled young woman from Boston visiting in Virginia for the first time. In the evening an owl in an old tree down the road began to hoot.

"To whoo! to whoo!" came the weird and lonesome call.

The young woman stepped to the open window to listen.

"To whoo! to whoo!" came the call again.

"What's that?" she inquired.

"An owl," said her hostess.

"Indeed," and her spectacles went up critically. "Well, all I have to say is its language is frightfully ungrammatical."—Detroit Free Press.

On the Trail to Copper River—Cunning of the Indians—A Wolverine Taken Into Camp by a Guide.

In the Field Near Powell Peak, Alaska, July 28, '91.—The morning after killing the caribou, July 16, was warm and we got started late. That night we stopped near our first Indian camp on a large river. This river is fifty or sixty yards in width, about middle deep, four to five mile current, and fordable, the Indians, some twenty or thirty in number, calling it "Ripple River." The communal fish-trap had not yet been built, as the salmon were just beginning to ascend, but in a day or two they had it done and some fine fish were caught. Fortunately these people were fairly supplied with dried moose meat, as we purposed making this a refitting place for provisions, exchange of dogs, hiring additional packers, etc. I had left Selkirk without any definite arrangements as to my Indian packing to the copper mine or Copper river, hoping for assistance from these new villages to make the latter. I now learned from these natives they considered the latter impossible in the summer, and almost so in the winter, even when the ice covered the numerous torrents and snow filled the many glacial crevasses that had to be met in the rough mountain pass. None of the Indians here would even think of discussing such a trip. We had now "shown our hands" so plainly to all natives by these discussions that we were determined to make Copper river that they raised all sorts of objections to prevent it. They urged they would be held responsible by other whites for our loss. Their customs as to such responsibilities are often at such variance with our own that their deductions seem as absurd to us as ours probably do to them. In many other ways too intricate and tedious to dwell upon they tried to drive this idea out of our heads until it seemed as if the very sword of Swearacles hung over the expedition. On the 17th and 18th we refitted; exchanging some dogs, and getting two additional Indian packers. The middle of the afternoon of the 18th we got away. One of the new packers was a young man of rather stupid appearance, whose father, a grizzled veteran of the camp, threw his arm over me, begging me to look after his boy, and rubbed his rough chin-beard against mine until I looked about twice as stupid as his son. The first four or five miles from the Ripple river village, southwest, was across a flat-bottom, where in one place we passed through fine red-topped grass, oftentimes head high. That night we camped near a small lake fairly steaming with vapor, it was so warm, evidently with hot springs emanating from its bottom.

The 19th carried us over an unusually high ridge from which the whole country for miles around could be seen. From Selkirk on we had seen and occasionally felt a few thunder showers, but now we began meeting longer-continued rains, without electrical exhibits, so characteristic of the Pacific slope of Alaska which we were rapidly nearing. That night we all got wet. We had no tent with us now, every possible thing we could abandon having been left behind at Mr. Harper's. The 20th we made but six miles on account of the rain, and having secured a caribou that required an unusual amount of strategic hunting before the Winchester laid it out. The 21st, still raining, gave us nineteen miles, however, as the Indians were anxious to make another village, which we found deserted, but nearly midnight a couple of boys, wild as hares, came in to tell us their village was a few miles up the river. This new stream was an imposing, unfordable river, 80 to 100 yards wide. The contemplated route was to raft down this river some unknown distance and then take to packing again. In the middle of the afternoon of 22d the three rafts came in sight and were soon alongside with the worst looking sylvan symposiums I ever saw constructed and called rafts. After enough negotiations to have purchased the Cunard line or the Canadian Pacific railway the rafts were ours; that day and part of the next being empolyed in repairing them. We had a frost the night of the 22d-23d of July. Next day at 2 we got away on the rafts (I called this the Raft River), southwest, and at 4 came to the main White coming in from the south, and after an hour's run landed on the west bank, abandoning the rafts. Here the White river is about a mile in width and very muddy. When the raft was submerged only the crossties could be seen and it really seemed as if we were floating down stream without anything under us. Next morning great excitement reigned in camp caused by two caribou charging through it, followed by shouting men firing guns and pistols and howling dogs that seemed like a lunatic asylum after a broken-loose menagerie. Nothing was secured, of course, but later a wounded animal bayed by a dog was killed. Our camp that night was near a deep stream of warm water where we enjoyed a bath, less the misery of the mosquitoes. The Indians urged us to start early the 25th, as there was a large glacial stream ahead, and these are found at their minimum depth in the early forenoon, they begin to rise about 10 and by 8 to 9 in the evening are roaring torrents unless the day has been a cool, cloudy one. The stream really amounted to nothing as an obstacle, being about knee deep. We were now getting high enough on the bald ridges to see our old friends the ptarmigain again, and from one high crest, just after breaking through a mountain pass, we came in full view of the grand St. Elias Alps, as fine an alpine scene as can be found on the western hemisphere, if not in the world. We camped at 9 after seventeen long weary miles, and where there was no wood except the stunted alpine kinds. Everything had a decided arctic appearance as we crept slowly towards the foot-hills of the St. Elias range. Early the 26th one of the Indians put the tourist end of a Winchester cartridge through a wolverine that was inspecting a marmot village near camp. Our sporting was certainly getting very diversified if not numerous. All we needed was a mammoth, as reported to probably exist by a former governor of Alaska, and a tebay, or Alaskan ibex, to have rounded it out so as to have satisfied the most exciting. We now traveled leisurely, as the natives said there was a glacial stream ahead we would strike too late to cross that day. We came to it about 2. It was fifty to seventy-five yards wide, quite deep and swift, with high waves, and roaring like Niagara. It was much higher than usual and it would take, said the Indians, two days continuous cool, cloudy weather to lower it so we could cross. They reported a better, wider crossing a mile below, and at this point we camped. That night, at times, we could hear the big boulders borne down the torrent go thundering down its bed like a small earthquake. The prospect of fording was not flattering. It was but a foot lower next morning, while the Indians were very reluctant to cross, delaying us with all sorts of excuse. At 11 the white men began crossing and by 11:40 we stood safe and sound on the other side. The Indians got a long, stout pole, held it horizontal, breast high, and crossed as a solid body.

In one spruce grove, where the trail was very plain, there were a great number of sharpened sticks driven in the path, points up, and protruding about an inch. On inquiring the object I was told if a bear came down the path these sticks absorbed his attention to an extent that he was uninterested in anything else, right or left, and generally took up a trot and left the district. On both sides, near by, were Indian meat catches on high poles that Ursa Major might have destroyed if he had noticed them, but diversions saved them. This beats the inventor who put spurs on scratching hens so, when at work, the spurs walked themselves off the flower beds. The "medicine man" of the Indians now said we must not fry grease that day or the glacial ice would fall in on us as we cross. We said we would forbear oleaginous condiments. About 3 we began ascending the glacier's moraine. Once on top of it, 200 high, it was densely brushed. At 5 we descended off it and met a roaring torrent 150 yards wide that a salmon could not cross. It was evident to all that the glacier must be crossed to get around this river that came from under it about a half mile above, despite the religious fear of the Indians for ice. They beseeched us to make no noise while on it or the crevasses would open and swallow us up. After ascertaining there were no other reasons for vitiating our insurance policies but grease and noise we swung around over the glacier, the course as usual over such ice and moraine being simply frightful. The Indians never stopped a second until all were over, about 7 o'clock. We camped on a torrent too wide to cross until bridged with poles.

Our natives now told us next day we would see the copper deposit. The trail of the 28th was over high, barren ridges, with ptarmigan and signs of other game, especially moose-horns. The latter were split into bone prongs by the natives to dig copper with, so they said. At 5 we went into camp on a high bank with the copper gulch facing us as it came out of the St. Elias range, about four miles away, and a big stream under our feet. A herd of caribou were seen opposite and our Indians crossed in pursuit, securing three, one full-grown animal being killed by the Winchester shotgun while on the run one hundred yards away.

FREDERICK SCHWATKA.

DECAY OF WEALTH.

Fallen Fortunes of the Barings and the Muriettas.

Forced Sale at Sacrifice Prices of th Latter's Household Goods and Family Mansion.

London, June 4.—Early in the last century Francis Baring, a poor Lutheran pastor from Bremen, set up in business in Devonshire as a wool merchant. Four of his descendants are now peers of this realm—the Earl of Northbrook, Lord Ashburton, Lord Revelstoke, and Sir Evelyn Baring, a British resident at Cairo, who has just been elevated to the peerage. The fall of the firm of Baring Brothesr has shattered Lord Revelstoke's health and ruined his fortunes, but the reconstructed firm is said to be doing well.

The Muriettas, who once aspired to equality with the Barings in the financial world, are also in perilous condition now. This week the old French furniture and objects of art collected from all parts of the world by the chiefs of the family in the days of their prosperity, have been sold at auction. Good prices were realized, as much as $12,000 having been paid for a suite of Louis XV. carved and gilt furniture for a salon, and $3,000 for a set of four Louis XVI. carved and gilt fauteuils. Dresden and other china fetched prices which proved that in spite of bad times there is still plenty of money in London.

The Messrs. Murietta's great town mansion was also put up at auction this week after an ineffectual attempt to sell it privately to an ambassador said to be Monsier Waddington, of France. The house occupies one of the finest sites in London, being situated at the extreme east end of Carlton House terrace overlooking the Horse Guards parade, and commanding a view of the whole of Hjamess Park. It is held on a lease direct from the Crown for an unexpired term of 69 1-2 years at a ground rent of $433 per annum. Its first tenant was the Duke of Hamiltion, who sold it to the Duke of Newcastle, from whom it was purchased by the late Earl Granville. Mr. De Murietta paid the Earl £60,000 for it in 1887, and in five years spent another £20,000 on the house in decorations, electric lighting, etc.

The highest bid the auctioneer could get was £50,000, and the property was withdrawn, but it was sold afterward by private contract for £55,000. It is considered that the purchaser has secured a bargain.

At the Patti concert as the wonderfully well-preserved ?prima donna bowed and smiled herself off the stage, on all sides was heard the whispered query: "How old should you think she was?" It is not very gallant, perhaps, says a writer in the Washington Post, except that a causal inspection of the figures leads us to the belief that some of them were furnished by the ladies themselves, but here is a little list of the place and year of birth of the most famous women of the modern stage:

FRUITS AND FLOWERS

In Profusion at the World's Fair.

Acres of Beautiful Blossoms Will be Shown,

And the Horticultural Display as a Whole Will Surpass Anything Ever Before Attempted.

Chicago, June 4.—The horticultural display at the world's fair will be bewildering in extent and marvelous in beauty. The exhibit will possess great scientific and educational value, but to the ordinary visitor its ornamental features will be the most striking. Indeed, it will play an important part in the adornment of the great exposition. While in almost every part of the exposition grounds may be seen gratifying evidences of the very efficient work of the horticultural department, the central point of interest will naturally be in the exhibit in the horticultural building. This structure is 998 feet long and has an extreme width of 250 feet. Its plan is a central pavilion with two end pavilions, each connected with it by front and rear curtains, forming two interior courts, each 88 by 270 feet. Surmounting the central pavilion is a beautifully proportioned dome, 187 feet in diameter and 113 feet high.

In the south pavilion of the building will be installed the viticultural exhibit, embracing all varieties of wine and everything pertaining to its manufacture. An idea of how complete this part of the exhibit will be can be gained from the fact that applications for space have already been received from thirty-three foreign countries. From abroad the exhibits of France, Germany, Spain and Italy will be especially notable. A fine exhibit of Chilean wines and raisins, famed for their superior quality, will be made. California will make a splendid display, all of the great firms being exhibitors and having applied for much more space than can possibly be allowed them. If permission, which has been asked, be given, Senator Stanford will exhibit a wine fountain. This, as planned, will throw, for two hours each morning and afternoon, graceful streams of wine to the height of 22 feet.

In the rear curtains of the building will be shown the fruit exhibit, which will include all varieties grown in any part of the world. As far as it is possible to do so, probably in a great majority of cases, fine specimens of the natural fruit will be shown. Otherwise wax models, so perfect in appearance as to be indistinguishable from the real fruit, will be substituted. For this exhibit about 44,000 square feet, or more than an entire acre of space, is reserved. A very complete and splendid exhibit of citrons and other fruits will be sent from California, Florida, Mexico and South American countries. By means of refrigerators ripe fruit can be sent long distances without injury, and after reaching the fair, cold storage facilities will be available to keep it in perfect condition.

Flowers.

The exhibit in the important line of floriculture will be exceptionally extensive, and the preparation of it is far advanced. Unless this were the case the exhibit could not well be a success, for time is required for the plants to overcome the check received in being transplanted. More than 500,000 transplanted shrubs and plants, of many species, are now growing in the exposition grounds, and the number is rapidly increasing. The department sent out circulars to prominent horticulturists and horticultural societies in all parts of the world, requesting donations of plants, and agreeing to permit the name and address of the donors to appear in connection with such specimens as they might send. The result is that thousands of plants—excellent specimens, too—have been forwarded. Among them are more than 50,000 rare rose plants, which have been donated by firms all the way from California to Hungary.

The floricultural exhibit will not be concentrated in one place. In the front curtains of the building will appear the greenhouse and hothouse plants—a very large variety and many rare and beautiful specimens. There, too, will be the finest display of orchids ever seen in this country, if not in the world. One firm alone will spend $40,000 on its orchid exhibit. At the opening of the fair, Chief Samuels says, there will be a display of 2,000 different varieties of orchids, embracing fully 15,000 specimens. Beneath the great dome will be the largest tropical plants obtainable, inculding Japanese and Chinese bamboos 75 and 80 feet high, palms 30 to 40 feet high, and tree ferns 15 feet or more in lenght. There will also be a miniature mountain covered with tropical plants, and in a cave within will be tried the experiments of growing plants by electric light and of growing them by the aid of electric currents, passed through the soil, both of which, it is claimed, have been accomplished with remarkable results.

Orange Groves.

The two courts of the horticultural building will be filled with orange groves from California and Florida, respectively. In each there will be not less than 160 trees, each bearing about 200 bright, ripe oranges. Thus an interesting comparison may be made between the oranges of the two states as to size and flavor, etc. The courts will also contain growing specimens of lemons, limes, bananas, etc. California would like to make a much larger display than will be possible, and applied for about fifty times as much space as could be assigned. It will occupy an acre on Midway Plaisance, with a citrus exhibit. On the Plaisance, too, five acres will be devoted to a nursery exhibit, and Wisconsin will show there a cranberry marsh. Six arcres in front of the horticultural building will be devoted to the floricultural exhibit, as will also space about many of the larger buildings.

The "wooded island," or as more properly named, perhaps, the flowery island, will be one of the most beautiful and attractive spots at the exposition. It embraces between 15 and 16 acres, and has been turned over almost entirely to the horticultural department for its exhibits. There, literally speaking, will be acres and acres of flowers of brightest and most varied hues and pleasing perfume. Little groves of trees, clumps of shrubbery and sinuous walks will relieve the gorgeous monotony of this floral display. On the north end of the island Japan will build its strange, antique temple and surround it with the choicest plants and flowers of the island realm of the Mikado. At various turns of the winding walks which thread this delightful domain of the flowers the visitor will encounter artistic little structures of the summerhouse description, within which one may seat himself and enjoy rest and beauty and perfume. Many of these retreats—16 or 18 in number—will have thatched roofs and be covered with growing vines, and otherwise ornamented in keeping with their beautiful surroundings.

Green Houses.

In the north pavilion of the horticultural building will be a very extensive display of vegetables, canned goods, horticultural appliances, etc. In the second story of each pavilion will be a restaurant capable of seating about 200 and profusely adorned with ferns, flowers, and exotic plants. Outside will be a number of greenhouses, where visitors may see an exceptionally complete collection of tropical vegetation. There will also be large auxiliary greenhouses, not open to the general public, where plants will be brought to perfect exhibit condition, and where plants will be cared for after their beauty season has passed.

It may be rightly inferred that the horticultural exhibit at the exposition will be the most complete and extensive ever made or attempted. It is certain to attract a great deal of attention and prove to be of great scientific and educational interest. It will have important features not specified above, as, for example, a vrey complete collection of insects, both the injurious and the beneficial ones, whose operations affect the fruits and other products of the horticulturist. It is th eintention to have in one place an exhibit of all of the species of plants mentioned in the Bible, and in others collections of almost equal historical interest.

Both Chief Samuels, who has general charge of the horticultural department, and Chief Thorp, who looks after the horticultural division of the exhibit, have proved themselves to be the right men for their respective duties, and it is already assured that the display which, with the active and genreous aid of horticulturists the world over, they will furnish, will be long and pleasantly remembered by every one who visits the world's fair.

Fair Notes.

The English admiralty authorities will send to Chicago models of a number of modern English war vessels.

The Ecuador commissioners have had constructed a fac-simile of the famous palace of the Inca Perca, the ruins of which stand near the city of Quito, and will exhibit it at the fair.

Hon. J. J. Grinlinton, world's fair commissioner from Ceylon, is in Chicago, engaged in making arrangements for the Ceylon court. His country is greatly interested in the fair, and will make a notable exhibit.

The H. C. Frick Coke company, of Pennsylvania, has decided to make a complete working model in miniature of its entire plant. The machinery will be in operation, the motive power being electricity, with gas for the ovens, the coke being represented by asbestos.

The New York exposition board is planning to show in its state building an exhibit illustrating completely the art history of the state. An effort will be made to have every New York artist, painter, sculptor, etcher and engraver of talent, from the earliest record, represented.

The French government has consented that plaster casts be made for the world's fair of the numerous art treasures in the Trocadero, Paris. The exposition authorities will bear the expense, which will be something above $25,000. The collection will be a very fine one and will occupy a conspicuous place in the fine arts building. After the fair the collection will be placed in the projected Chicago museum, where it is believed, it will prove a great benefit to American artists and of much interest to visitors.

Carl Hagenbeck, of Hamburg, the celebrated dealer in wild animals, will take to Chicago his entire collection of trained and wild animals, also his collection in natural history. A structure in the form of a Roman arena will be erected in the Midway Plaisance on a space 110 feet square, where some seventy animals and several hundred monkeys and parrots will be shown. The wildest beasts living, together with domestic animals, will go through all sorts of performances.

DRANK HIS OWN BLOOD

To Quench His Terrible Burning Thirst.

A Mexican Boy Forced to Do So—His Employer Lost in the Arid Wilds of Texas.

El Paso, Tex., June 4.—News has reached this city that William G. Bailey and family had been lost on the plains west of this city. Inspector of Customs Hyland, of Deming, N. M., arrived here with an escort of Mexican soldiers, and form him was obtained the following particulars:

Palomas is a town in Mexico 65 miles west of El Paso. William G. Bailey, a well-to-do citizen of Palomas, accompanied by his young wife and a Mexican, left Palomas two weeks ago to come to El Paso to purchase supplies. They arrived here on time, made their purchases in Juarez and El Paso and eight days ago started out on their return home. Thirty-eight miles southwest of El Paso they lost their way and were without water. The Mexican boy was sent out with the wagon and horses to hunt water for them. While searching for water the horses got away from him. Wednesday night last the boy arrived at Palomas. He was alsmost entirely naked and had a bullent wound in one of his legs. The boy told his story of how he had returned without Mr. and Mrs. Bailey. He had failed to find water, and when the horses escaped from him he started out on foot for Palomas to send assistance to Mr. Bailey. He was suffering for water, and quench his thirst he shot himself in the leg and sucked the blood from the wound and drank it.

A rescue party from among the Mexican soldiers stationed at Palomas with Captain Hyland was made up and started in search for Mr. Bailey and wife. Friday evening at dusk the party found Mrs. Bailey. He was suffering for water, and [illegible] where the horses were taken out and sent off for water. She was so weak and nervous that she fainted when her rescurers arrived. On regaining consciousness she stated that her husband left her the day before to return to Juarez for horses and water.

The rescuing party came on to Juarez, but failed to find Mr. Bailey. It is possible that he lost his way and has perished in the mountains. Several searching parties started out again to find Mr. Bailey, if possible, but no word has been received from any of them yet.

BILLY BOYD'S BATH.

It was of Champagne and Cost $800, but Billy Died in Poverty.

SanFrancisco, Cal., June 4.—In the morgue in this city lies the body of "Billy" Boyd, who was known as the most glorious spender of the Pacific coast. Poverty-stricken and without friends, he had shot himself after a career of dissipation that has seldom been paralleled in this country. At least there is no record of any other man than Boyd taking a bath in imported champagne that cost $800.

Boyd was customs inspector when the bill was passed requiring all Chinese who departed to secure return certificates. His observations led him to devise an ingenious system of issuing bogus certificates, which were sold here and in Hong Kong for $36 each. Of this sum Boyd received one-third and other conspirators the remainder. One of his accomplices was Whalley, who is now engaged in smuggling opium into port.

Boyd was a high-roller and spent money like water. He lavished a fortune on a courtesan named Dollie Chisholm, and he capped the climax of his society debaucheries one night at the famous Cliff House. After an elaborte dinner on the balcony overlooking the Seal Rocks and the Pacific, Boyd declared he must have a champagne bath. Whalley and others present tried to dissuade him, but he ordered several cases of the best imported brands. Passers on the Cliff House road heard the popping of corks like the discharge of musketry. At this time Boyd, like one of the Caesars, enjoyed himself in this unique bath.

He spent $50,000 in less than a year, and when exposure finally came he fled to Australia, taking the remnant of his stealings along. After many months of exile he came back and turned state's evidence. Since then he has been engaged in several shady schemes. His suicide was due to poverty.

HOW SHE PUT IT.

"Yes, indeed," said Miss Bleecker, "the early bird catches the worm."

"It does seem to be an incontrovertible fact," added Miss Emerson, of Boston, "that the anticipatory avis secures the prematurely active vermicular specimen."—Judge.

HOT WEATHER

In Store for the Coming Season.

There Will Also be Some Bad Storms,

And a Possible Drouth, According to Professor Foster—How the Coal Strata Were Formed.

Copyrighted, 1892, by W. T. Foster.

St. Joseph, Mo., June 4.—My last bulletin gave forecasts of the storm waves to cross the continent from June 1 to 5 and 7 to 12. The next will reach the Pacific coast about the 11th, cross the western mountains by the close of the 12th, the great central valleys from the 13th to 15th, and the eastern states about the 16th.

Dryer weather may be expected in the Gulf and Atlantic states, with an increase of rain in the highlands of Colorado, Wyoming and Montana. States south of the 40th degree of north latitude in the great central valleys will show a continued average deficiency in rainfall with excess of rain in only a few localities. The upper Missouri and the upper Mississippi valleys will have sufficient moisture for the crops with a few exceptions.

The storms of June will continue to be of tornado, water spout, hurricane, hail and thunder storm varieties. Rains will come in showers and not in general rainstorms.

First frosts in the fall will be late, and there will be an abundance of time for late crops to mature. The greatest danger to crops, as long ago announced, will be drouth in various places south of the 40th degree of north latitude.

June, July and August will be warmer than the average of these months, and the storm centers and severe local storms will take routes well to the north.

The Earth's Geology No. 3.

Our coal strta were necessarily laid down in water, and the stratified rocks and other materials above these coal seams alternately contain flora and fauna that have respectively grown first in salt water and then in fresh water, and these indisputable facts constitute very strong evidences that the constitutents have been, in the long geologic ages of the past, repeatedly submerged.

But how? What forces in the formation of our earth caused the continents to be repeatedly covered by the seas? Here the dividing line between the igneous theory and the aqueous theory. Our scientists in all departments take the igneous theory as their base, and the geologists argue that these submergencies were caused by the breaking up of the earth's crust before it was sufficiently cooled to become permanent. That is the ingneous theory.

I hold to the aqueous theory, believing the earth is, and ever has been, solid to its center, and that the continents have been submerged by the waters rising instead of by the continents sinking.

There are from 100 to 150 strata of coal in the ten miles of the earth's surface that has been partially surveyed. The deepest parts of the oceans are about five miles below, and the highest mountains are about five miles about sea level. These depressions and elevations make up the ten miles of the earth's surface that has been geologically considered. These must have been a submergence of land surfaces for each principal seam of coal, if the igneous theory is correct.

To fit the case geologists invented the theory that the continents have risen out of and fallen back into the waters 100 or more times. This strange, unnatural and miraculous conduct of the continents was absolutely necessary, for coal could not be formed of vegetation in any other way.

The land would rise out of the water, and then gigantic primeval vegetation would cover it for ages. Then the continents would sink into the seas again, and remaining submerged for other ages, the decaying vegetable growths would [illegible] separating the carbon from the other substances of these vegetable growths and this carbon would precipitate or settle in the ocean waters forming our coal measures or strata.

If this theory of coal formation can stand the test of reason, then the igneous theory, with its continents, Venus like, rising from the waters a hundred or more times, may survive, but if coal is not a vegetable product, or if it is beyond reason that the continents could have risen and fallen for every stratum of coal we find in the earth, then the igneous theory must give way to the aqueous, and the latter may explain the ocean banks that lie 400 to 600 feet under water around the coasts of all Atlantic and Pacific oceans; the great forests that lie hundreds of feet under the salt waters of the oceans, and may throw light on the shadowy passages of Bible Genesis and the legends that come to us through all the races of man respecting a great flood known as the deluge of Noah's time.

If one great deluge can be reasonably accounted for and assigned to the great natural meteorological events, then the invention of the geologists whereby the continents have been made to rise out of and sink back into the seas a hunderd times, for the accommodation of coal formations, will no longer be a necessity.

NEVER IN THE RECORD.

A prohibition member of congress had been absent without leave and he was called on for an excuse. Being new in the business he began his remarks in his place at his desk.

"I will state, Mr. Speaker——," he began.

"I rise to a question of order," interrupted a member.

"The gentleman from Georgia will state it," said the speaker.

"It is that the gentleman must present his excuse at the bar of the house," explained the member.

"The rule requires that the gentleman present his excuse at the bar of the house," announced the speaker.

The offending member turned all the colors of the rainbow, and finally settled down to a pale white.

"M—Mr. Speaker," he stammered and almost wept. "I never was in that restaurant downstairs in my life, nor in any bar anywhere. If the people of my district ever heard of my going to such a place, I couldn't get two votes in the county. I tell you again, I never was at a-any b-bar in my life, a-a-and I'll be da-da-darned if I g-g-go now," and down he sat with a slosh and waited until a colleague explained the situation to him.

As in the case of many other interesting events on the floor of the house, this never got into the Record.—Detroit Free Press.

DOUBTFUL COMPLIMENT.

Gus De Smith has been in rather straightened circumstances of late. He called on Col. Gilhooly for some assistance, and the colonel came to his relief with some good advice.

"If I were you I would try and see old Twopercent and negotiate a loan."

"But I heard," responded Gus, "that the other day he kicked one of the best looking and most intelligent young men of New York out of his office."

"That's the very reason you are safe in applying to him. If he kicked and abused an intelligent looking man, he will be apt to take you out to lunch and turn over the key of his safe to you. You are bound to impress him favorably."—Texas Siftings.

WILD VIOLETS.

Down by the meadow brook, close to the water,
Sheltered in summer by dropping trees,
Was the home of a fairy's blue-eyed daughter,
That no one knew but the birds and the bees.

She used to peep from the long, deep grasses,
And nod and smile at the bobolink,
And hide again when the country lasses
Went hunting blossoms along the brink.

Her dewy eyes grew soft and tender
When Bobby sat on a low hung bough,
Forgetting all of the gay world's splendor,
And turning his songs to a lover's vow.

But the drear frosts came, and the bleak November
Swept the fields in a wrathful flood;
So changed was the world I could scarce remember
Where the blue-eyed fairy's cottage stood.

Heavy with storms the clouds hung over—
Never a sound of bird or bee;
Silent as death 'neath its snowy cover
Fettered and helpless from sea to sea.

Now, who is there in the grand dominion
Of all the earth and air and sky,
To shelter and guide a wee bird's pinion,
And watch by the bed when the flowers die?

* * * * * * *

Down by the meadow brook just at the dawning
Straying I go the world is so sweet,
And I hear a gay bobolink singing "good morning,"
And a darling blue violet smiles at my feet.

OUT OF HER "SPHERE" AGAIN.

"In the latest domestic tragedy that has been reported from Paris an injured wife and not the husband figures as the venger of marital infidelity. The tragedies of this kind would be multiplied if this summary manner of procedure should become the fashion throughout the land."—Exchange.

I smiled as I read this "conclusion," and thought, thatis a satire on the immorality of the "heads of families," written by one of my own sex. But as I read on, I found, to my surprise, that the author was a man and that the impression I had received was not at all the one he wished to convey.

He evidently thought it very unwomanly and a very bad example for a woman to avenge herself on the destroyer of her happiness and home. That she was unsexing herself, besmirching her "womanly purity," and all that.

We would regard a man with contempt who would condone the sin of infidelity in his wife, and believe the shedding of blood was no crime, for such a cause. Yet many women have to condone such offenses from the day of their marriage and make no sign. If there is a surer way for a woman to become impure than in entering into marriage relations with an impure man, I would like to know what it is. Still, women who believe in and demand equal purity for men and women are called cranks, and told that they are unsexing themselves in putting such "delicate subjects" before the public.

"It is expected that man will be immoral. Didn't Eve tempt him to eat the forbidden fruit?" and then all that bosh about women being the tempters of men is rehashed, and if we are not convinced, it is because "the female mind is illogical."

I think the best and truest account of the "creation" I have ever read, was the "Slate pencil essay" by a little 7-year girl. She wrote: "When God made man, he said, 'he is good, but I can do better next time, and then he made woman."

In the soul of woman he planted an innate love for virtue and purity, so that when the spirit of evil plotted the downfall of Adam and Eve, he brought all his craft and cunning to bear upon the woman, and tempted her through her thirst for knowledge and desire for eternal life. He knew the man would be an easy victim, and so he was. I pity the man who has no better excuse to offer for his depravity than the one given by this whining, cowardly, despicable old Adam, "the woman tempted me."

A woman has a right to demand that her husband be as pure in soul and body as she is. If he is untrue to her she has the same right to vengeance that he has. And if it be true that this would multiply tragedies of this kind, the fact is a shame to the men of the land and a disgrace that rivers of blood cannot wash out.

FINDING FAULT.

It is difficult to define exactly what we mean by a fault, but we all know that it is something that can be found by a blind man, and that no one is so stupid or ignorant or incapable, but that they can, or think they can discern a mote in the eye of their brother or sister.

"W. F. C.," writing in the Bee a few days ago, under "Voice of the People," comments on the musical criticism (?) made by a so-called critic, on the "Damrosch concert," and, after exposing the incongruities of the article, remarks that "Someone has said 'most any one can find fault."

Some one else has said, "Many persons criticize in order not to seem ignorant; they do not know that indulgence is a mark of the highest culture."

But this spirit of intolerance of the faults of others is not confined to the ignorant. We find it the world over. No matter how happy a person is there is always an "if" or "but." If we could have had our way we could have improved greatly on the work of the Creator. If we had been born of rich parents we would have appreciated and made good use of the advantages of wealth; or if we had been born poor, we would not try to rise above our station. Poverty and pride is a bad combination. If other people meet with reverses, it is due to careless management or bad judgment: if trouble comes to us, it is our bad luck, or, if we are religious, a dispensation of Providence.

And this spirit of fault finding is carried into the church; and over our Sunday dinner we criticize the minister, and while we admit that what he says is very good, his delivery is so prosy, we fear he will never be able to build up the church, and his wife is such a dowdy, she is only a hinderance.

If I had written that book I would have made it much more interesting, says the literary critic; or if I had composed that opera, I would have had no harsh discordant notes, or I would have selected persons to sing it whose voices were of sufficient strength, sweetness and culture to give it proper expression.

And so on and on. We are forever putting ourselves in the places of others, forgetting that every person is actuated by his own impulses. That he acts as his own particular disposition and character prompt him, and that in his place we would act exactly as he does.

Why is it that the good qualities of our neighbors are not thought of before their faults?

Everyone believes that perfect people are the most disagreeable in the world—those "perfect" people, who in order not to speak wrong, never speak at all, and for fear of doing wrong do nothing; one of those smooth, precise, cold, colorless individuals, whose very presence makes one feel wicked, and as though the company of a criminal would be preferable.

Certainly the impulsive, warm-hearted, quick-tempered, faulty people are the kind we like best. Then why do we criticize and censure them? Well, this is one of life's puzzles; but that we all do it, and enjoy the process, too, is evidenced by the fact that I have devoted all this precious time and space to criticism of the very faults of which (must I confess it?) I am most often guilty.

Boston, New York and Philadelphia are all torn up over the Chicago University. They scarcely know whether to applaud or sneer, on being told that the new institution will start off with a $200,000 gymnasium, one of the assistants to be a woman, and that the courses in physical instruction are to be arranged for both sexes. This is a provision, which has been made to no full extent by the other coeducational colleges.

CHAT IN A CORNER.

Let club members and readers remember we are awaiting votes on the prize essays. A number are in and we want more. The announcement will be made from them and the votes be published next week.

"Prac," evidently, fears that the change in the name of this department has robbed it of its home-like, restful character, and she prefers the "Household," as a spot where women rest from the "continual grind," etc. The chairman invites all the members to express an opinion on the question, and especially desires the home-makers to give us their ideas.

Perhaps it was before Prac joined our circle that our good sister Bessie Barton said (once when the question of a change of name and scope was being discussed), "don't have it too domestic, too kitcheny in detail; the most of us need to have our thoughts taken from the daily grind and led out into other paths." And Bessie is a model housewife and mother; not a complaining one. There is force and "a worthy sentiment" in Prac's suggestions, as also in the other plea. Let the members speak their minds.

A BIT OF GLORIFICATIONS.

Dear Bees of our busy hive: I was made very glad by a little affair that came under my observation last week and I want to write you a personal "open letter" about it. It was this: Perhaps you have noticed that we had a convention of commercial travelers in this city of our headquarters. Hundreds of "drummers" from all over the United States congregated here for a two-days' reunion and good time. You know the drummers are well posted on good style and good living: they go everywhere and see everything. Well, on the festive occasion of ball and banquet the caterers were two women and the florist who decorated the beautiful dance and banquet rooms was a woman: Mrs Beatty, Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Suder. I am so proud of the splendid work they did I call their names right out in this meeting. A drummer who is old in the business and who attends all the annual meetings said to me, "the taste and excellence of their work has not been equaled at any time or place."

This is my observation and conclusion: women excel in detail and in finish, in such work. The trained eye discovers if the table damask is a bit awry and will not tolerate linens or differing breadth. They know the charm of china over ordinary table ware and of a hundred little fine touches, that all go into the general effect.

To attempt to describe in detail the beauty of the floral decorations of the walls and the tables, would be to repeat what has already been said in the daily prints. This was meant only for a bit of glorification, all by ourselves, that our sisters did themselves such credit in this comparatively new field. Yours,

BARBARA.

WHY CHANGE?

A Bee Hive is always associated in my mind with work, with never a day off to go a fishing; a place where drones and idlers, be they ever so delightful, are not tolerated; an everlasting monotonous laying up of treasure which is all to be taken away by others, except so much as will keep the workers alive to toil on in the same routine another season. It is only a workshop; there is no cozy fireside nor easy chair and slippers, no sympathy with the long, long thoughts of youth nor the retrospection of age.

How different in the Household, the home. There is our escape from the grind of the world; there we take our joys, our sorrows, our plans for the future and our daily life finding from some member a ready sympathy, encouragement and assistance for all; there is a check for our follies and a stimulus for our ambition. Home has ever been an incentive for the best endeavor of man.

Recently the New York Tribune devoted a column to denouncing Mr. Powderly for his "inaccurate assertion" that everything that we consume reaches us through a trust. Some time has passed since Mr. Carnegie said in its columns that it was not a fact that rich men were growing richer and the poor poorer, but that the rich man was growing poorer and poor richer, and still nothing has been said regarding any inaccuracies in Mr. Carnegie's statements.

PRAC.

THE BACK YARD.

There are few housekeepers who do not clean house, or at least go through the motions, but there are quite a number that make no pretense of cleaning their yards, or at least their back yards. And, pray, what is more disgusting and suggestive of the uncanny alleys of the cities than old cans, rags, ash, and garbage heaps and other trash in a back yard!

We don't want to say it right out loud, because it would hurt some one's feelings, but still it is a fact that no good housekeeper will ever have such a yard. She will never throw her cans, vegetable refuse, egg shells, etc., out at the door, nor sweep her dirt out nor, indeed, have anything disfiguring or unsightly at the rear of her home any sooner than in front of it.

But if any sister housewife has not had due regard for this part of spring cleaning, let her by all means awake to the necessity for health's sake, if not for that of comfort and decency. There are enough germs of disease in some folks' back yards, steaming with filth, to inoculate a neighborhood. Don't forget this fact my careless sister.

Then try and have a little pride in your back door yard. I have in mine—pardon me for being personal; and can't bear to see even a stick, bone, string or anything savoring of slovenliness there. I can brook a topsy-turvy center table and dust inside better than this.

But, says my awakened friend, as for the first time she really drinks in the unsightly landscape from her kitchen window—tall bleached weeds and burdocks, bent by winter's snow; old pails, broken chairs, mop handles, remnants of carpets and clothing, with filth and disorder everywhere—"how can I avoid this? what shall I do with all these things?"

And I dare say there are many inexperienced ones who are at a loss to know how to keep their back door premises tidy and inviting.

To such I would say, you must first of all be resolved to be neat here, and this is the main thing; you will then be on your guard against tossing everything out of the back door. You will throw your old can into some hole or ditch or have them carted off with your ashes; you will burn your garbage if you have nothing to feed it to or no swill man; you will be conscientious about sweeping your dirt over the threshold, always burning it instead; old garments will swell the ragman's stock and decrepit furniture be forthwith converted into kindling wood or repaired; your coffee dregs will, if thrown out, never be emptied in one place until the grass is ashamed to lift its head, but so scattered as to leave no visible trace, while the egg shells used to settle grounds and dish water are likewise never allowed to make bald spots!

What do you say, sisters, to putting up a little wholesome, good-natured strife with our neighbors about this back door and yard business? Wouldn't it raise a higher standard and improve our sanitary condition?

Let us see if a bed of pansies or verbenas wouldn't rest our eyes and lift our thoughts better than that which is seen in too many back yards.

ESTELLE MENDELL.

ANGEL OF ANNUNCIATION.

A holy angel came one night
With lilies in her hand;
All silvered by the clear moonlight
I saw her stand.

About her like a halo shone
Her rippling golden hair.
The lilies cast their shadows on Her bosom bare.

Her eyes gleamed softly through the gloom—
Her radiant, heavenly eyes—
Her presence made my narrow room
A paradise.

Low words she spoke, sweet words that made
My soul grow still to know;
And softly on my breast she laid
The blooms, like snow.

Then all was silence, and the moon
Across my casement shone;
The vision vanished all too soon;
I was alone.

Save for the lilies sweet and white
That on my breast were laid;
Save for the memory of the light
Her presence made.

Since that rare hour upon my breast
Those lilies still I bear;
Fadeless and beautiful they rest
Their pureness there.

The years may come, the years may go,
And light and youth depart;
Immortal shall their beauty glow
Within my heart.

THE DOMESTIC CORNER.

How People with More Time Than Money Can Adorn Their Homes

Says a writer in the American Agriculturist: I was lately a guest at a country house where the spare room in its fresh and dainty beauty must certainly have been a joy forever. When I complimented my hostess on her taste, she said, apologetically, that she could do no better, having very little money. Even to the painting and papering it was the work of her own hands, and this woman had five little children, and did all the work of the house, including the boarding of hired men through the summer.

A wonderful woman, truly. Don't it tire one just to read of the poor soul doing with one pair of hands, all the countless household duties, caring for five little ones, cooking for a lot of hungry men, and gratifying her love of the beautiful by stealing from the hours of rest, time for the decoration and beautifying of her home. Sometime, in shattered health and premature age, she will pay dearly for the "theft," and the family will wonder "why mother grew old so soon?"

In the same article the writer says, truly, that rich carpets and costly furniture and bric-a-brac do not always give the "home" look that another far simpler home may possess. But the hints on home decoration in the Corner, are not for the woman who fills the positions of cook, laundress, seamstress and nurse. If the Domestic Corner has such a reader, my advice to her is, strike! Strike for your rights, shorter hours, and more pay, and if you can't obtain them, don't add to your manifold duties by taking up home decoration. A home where the wife and mother is a slave, could never be beautiful no matter how handsome its decoration.

Turkish embroidery is now receiving general attention in the world of decorative art and will probably provide a favorite occupation for feminine hands on hotel verandas in the country and at the seaside during the summer. It is wonderfully rich in effect and possesses the happy attribute of being very easy to do. For ornamenting piano and table covers and scarfs, screens, bannerettes, door and window lambrequins, portieres, chair and sofa seats and backs, ottomans, footstools, etc., the work is extremely effective, particularly when done with filo flosses in colors combined with gold, silver or copper threads. Worked on linen table napery with white filo floss the decoration is very artistic, being rich and glossy in effect.

An elaborate-looking coverlet, but one not difficult to do, is made of an equal number of Guipure lace squares and brown Holland or white linen cut into squares just the same size as the lace ones when the turning-in has been allowed for.

Upon each linen piece embroider in outline a small flower, bird or butterfly in flax threads or washing-silk. The lace and linen squares are joined together alternately, edged with Guipure to match the squares, and lined with colored sateen to match the prevailing color of the room.

A very pretty wall photograph frame can be made in this way: Copper-colored plush stretched over stout card board or canvas, and edged with a multicolored fringe of silk. A trail of flowers, painted or embroidered, can be added along the fold which holds the photos. Two brass rings, overcast with silk, suspend the frame to the wall.

Beautiful portieres lately made here are of undyed velveteen, a creamy material tinged with brown, having four groups of fir cones, with their spiky accompaniments thrown carelessly near the corners; but irregularity is the order of the day, and the groups are diversified in form and arrangement.

The cones are worked in brown silk, with shades of green for the pine-needles, and afford a lovely bit of artistic coloring upon the soft creamy ground.

Canton flannel wall dusters, or broom dusters, as they are sometimes called, are a great convenience when one wishes to thoroughly dust the walls on sweeping day, as every housekeeper who has tried them can testify. They are so very pretty and odd, besides being cheap and convenient, that a set of them would make a very neat and acceptable present for any housekeeper, especially those to whom all pretty things are dedicated—the beginners just fitting up their new nests. Three or more will be needed for a set. Unbleached Canton flannel, unbleached knitting cotton, and a little fast-colored coarse embroidery cotton will be required. Make plain bags as wide as the broom and deep enough to just about half cover it, and finish at the tops with plain hems; then with a pointed crochet hook and the knitting cotton crochet directly into the hem as follows: Begin at the side seam with one treble, chain three, pass a space as long as the three chain, and work another treble in hem, chain three—go on in this way the whole length of the hem and join; go around four times more and finish with small scallops at the top; run a twisted cord into the upper row of holes and tip each end with a tassel. The lettering, and the branch, and spider-web, or any other chosen design, are to be worked in coarse outline or chain stitch with the red, blue, or brown cotton, the object being to produce not fine work, but a showy effect. Fast-colored yarn is as good or better than the embroidery cotton and more rapidly worked; sometimes the crochet work is also in colored yarn to match, but, unless one is very sure that it will endure washing and boiling, the unbleached is better.

THE SCRAP BASKET.

For the newspaper man is the lord of creation—
The mother of public opinions and views.
One night in the midst of a church congregation,
The next at a banquet in search of the news.
He speaks and the world stands in awe at his wisdom;
It smiles and it laughs at his wit and his fun;
No rival to oust him, for in his dominion
He knows he is king, for his work is well done.
So let us all join and pour out a libation
To him who's the foremost—who leads in the van.
And joining our voices in vast aggregation,
Give ear-splitting shout for the newspaper man.

The Housewife Union of Berlin, founded by Frau Lina Morgenstern, twenty years ago, for improving domestic service, has become one of the most useful organizations of Germany. It gives prizes to women who have remained in the service of the same family for terms of five, ten, twenty, and thirty years, the highest prize being thirty marks in gold. At a recent meeting a prize was given to one woman who had served fifty years in one place, outliving two generations. Another's term of service had lasted thirty-eight years. The union also supports a free intelligence office and a cooking school.

Five women have recently been employed to decorate sleeping-car interiors at Wilmington, Del., one of them being Miss Mabel Dunlap, a graduate of the Philadelphia School of Design.

A good story is told of the encounter which Miss Lucinda Q. Gore, a schoolteacher at Lackharabad, India, had with a tiger. Turning from the blackboard, she was confronted by a Royal Bengal at the open school-room door. With woman's wit, she jammed the brush end of a broom into his eyes, and when he drew back with a growl of pain, slammed the door in his face. Help came before the man-eater could gain ingress elsewhere, and the brave woman and her pupils were rescued.

"It is an actual fact," said W. A. Duncan, "that of the 80,000 criminals in the prisons and jails of United States to-day and the half million criminals at large in the different states and territories, one-third of them are under 20, two-thirds under 21, and three-fourths under 22 years." In the face of such a startling statement as this will not our friends help us save the boys? Is it not easier and cheaper to prevent a boy's becoming a criminal than to reform him after he has become one—thanking our friends for their great kindness we bespeak their assistance in the future and ask them to look in upon the home and see for themselves what we are doing. Our circle at present is composed of 38 ladies, and we would gladly welcome more workers among us. By order of the president.

He walked in with a heavy tread

Then flashed the editorial eye;

"Go right straight back and shut that door."

Thirty-five years ago thirty young women of a Milford (Conn.) church organized a Bee Hive society, the features of which were celibacy, and the payment of a membership fee of $30—the interest to be expended in providing an annual dinner, the principal to remain untouched, and to revert to the last surviving member. This year but half of the original thirty remain—the others having been swept off by death or matrimony—and they have renamed themselves the "Old Maids' society."

In ancient days the precept was, "Know thyself." In modern times it has been supplanted by the far more fashionable maxim, "Know thy neighbor and everything about him."

SPENCER ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

It is a curious fact that Mr. Spencer was formerly an advocate of female emancipation. He now declares himself against it. The Liberals were, until lately, the hope and trust of the female suffragists. They, indeed, were once on the verge of passing a resolution on the question through the house of commons. Recently, however, they appear to have grown tired of the women, and the conservatives have taken them up. These have passed a resolution at Birmingham in favor of female suffrage. When Mrs. Fawcett—the widow of the blind postmaster-general, and the mother of Miss Fawcett, who beat the senior wrangler in mathematics at Cambridge—addressed the convocation, she said that the Gladstonians feared that the women would re-enforce the party order and the upholders of the indissoluble union between Great Britain and Ireland. It is odd that Spencer should desert the female emancipators just as the "Primrose dames" have rendered such solid service to the tory leaders as to convince a large portion of them that the ballot ought to be granted to them. That women cannot go to war seems a poor and idle plea for refusing them a voice in public affairs. Men who have passed the age of military duty are permitted to vote, and since the days of Homer particular respect has been given to their decisions. It is only countries where the conscription prevails that weight should be attached to women's inability for military services. In England and the United States armies are formed by voluntary recruitment. In the last century the recruiting system was almost universal. All countries would probably revert to it if women voted. Who shall say that the reversion would not be a good thing for civilization?—Julien Gordon in North American Review for January.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Theatrical people are discussing a good story on Sydney Rosenfeld, author of "Imagination." It seems that when the parts were being given out a very good actor was given an unimportant role, and and offered a salary in proportion. Of course the actor demurred, but Rosenfeld took him to one side and said: "My dear fellow, this play is called 'imagination.' It illustrates the idea that if a man imagines so and so to be the case, it is the case. Now, just imagine the part is a big one, and you are getting a big salary. Are you imagining it? Yes! Well, there you are—now you have an important role and are being paid royally for it." Well, the actor studied the part and attended rehearsals. On the Monday evening of the performance Mr. Rosenfeld was handed the following note: "Fully appreciating the power of imagination I am compelled to forego the pleasure of acting in your company. Just imagine I'm acting. Are you imagining it? Yes! Well, there you are. Now I'm on the stage and getting a big salary. Kindly send latter by bearer."

Cyclers will be interested in this talk from the Baltimore Sun: "It was about the year 1837," said Mr. Wm. Boucher, jr., one of our oldest and best-known citizens, yesterday, "that I visited Baron von Tresel, a poor nobleman of Mannheim, in the Grand Duchy of Baden, my native place, and he showed me a number of his inventions, among which was the bicycle. The baron was a great person for inventions. He spent all he had on his projects and was in very reduced circumstances. Still he kept on with them, living on but very little. His midday meal consisted of a piece of bread and a small bit of sausage. People called him 'the crazy baron.' Among his inventions also was a contrivance for snuffing out a candle when it burned down to the danger line. This was for the benefit of folks who would read in bed. But the bicycle was the principal thing. The wheels were of equal size, but had no pedals. The seat rose up from the middle, and could be regulated like a piano stool. You sat on that seat and propelled the machine by striking the feet against the ground. He invited me to take a ride with him. He rode beside me on one and kept me from falling off the other until I learned how to get along. It was pretty awkward, and I remember that I scraped the toes of my shoes off in the course of the journey. We went about two English miles. The baron never made anything out of his inventions, but the government, I believe, gave him a little pension to keep him from want. He called his bicycle invention the 'tresina.'"

A very interesting exhibit which, it is reported, the British commission is planning to make at the world's fair, is a large scale map, showing the discoveries which have been made in North America by Englishmen. Though Columbus discovered the West Indies, the credit of first sighting the mainland of America seems—if we put aside the unrecorded investigations of the Northmen—to be due to an Englishman—Sebastian Cabot; and the list of names of English explorers of America, which is headed by his, is a very long and distinguished one. Raleigh, Sir Humphrey Gilbert, Sir Hugh Willoughby, Frobisher, Davis, Hudson, Baffin, in the seventeenth century, were followed, in the eighteenth, by Scoresby and Cook; while the work they commenced was carried on during our own century by the Rosses, Parry, Franklin, Collinson, Maclure, McClintock, Nares and Markham. It will, therefore, be seen that there is ample material for a map such as that proposed.

Complaint is made that the German emperor is spending too much money on personal expenses, principally of travel, while millions of his subjects are in abject poverty and a considerable proportion of them are in a condition bordering on starvation. The emperor means well, says the San Francisco Call, and is sympathetic, but the contrast is great between his life and that of the masses. The question may be suggested whether the masses would be any better off if his majesty lived in state as simply as the Roi d'Yvetot and rode about in his dominions on an ass, followed by a dog, instead of having special railway trains and long retinues of couriers and guards. He cannot spend his money this way without doing good. The money is distributed into a hundred channels and provides employment for vast numbers. Those who rail at modern extravagance forget that every indulgence costs money and employs labor. If the opulent were all misers we should have a very poor world and a very level plane of existence.

A couple of mahogany tables, which were souvenirs of the notorious Jack Sheppard, were offered on Thursday afternoon for public competition, says a London dispatch, among other articles of furniture at the old Blackjack, Portsmouth street, Lincoln's Inn Field. This house has a history of its own. It was a favorite resort of Joe Miller, who died in 1728, and the first edition of his jests which have rendered his name so famous was published in the course of the year following. The Blackjack, which is almost directly opposite to the reputed but not sufficiently authenticated "Old Curiosity Shop" of Charles Dickens, derived an alternative name of "The Jump," by which it was long distinguished, from the circumstance that Jack Sheppard upon one occasion found it daringly expedient to jump from one of its second-floor windows in order to evade the officers of justice, otherwise suggestively described as the emissaries of Jonathan Will.

It is a somewhat cruel illustration of the evanescence of the interest taken in the fortunes of departed greatness that a single guinea represented to-day the value put upon the tables to which traditions so famous are attached.

HEAR THE CONCLUSION

Of the Whole Matter, Says Elder J. L. McDonald,

After Hearing the Views of Four Pastors.

He Finds That the Disciple Church Is the Only Organization Defined by the Scriptures.

Owing to the fact that the representative of the Methodist Episcopal church refused to occupy his pulpit on Sunday evening last, Rev. J. L. McDonald took the occasion to compare the fundamental principles of each denomination, which had been represented, with the position of the Disciples of Christ. The following is an outline of his address:

Text—"If ye continue in my words, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." John 8:31, 32.

Mr. McDonald said: "I do not quote this scripture to preach from it, but to point to the fundamental principles of the position taken by the Disciples of Christ, and fortify the minds of all hearers against misunderstandings. My purpose is to show the resemblance in doctrines and practice between the Disciples of Christ and the denominations represented from this pulpit during the four Sunday evenings preceding this.

"But first of all I would call your attention to the fact that each of the parties represented here stands for a great truth. No party can be built up without a foundation, and error cannot be fashioned into a foundation. This is true of all religions, Pagan, Mohammedan and Christian. Each has its foundation in truth whatever error may be mingled in the structure built upon it. So when we come to consider the great underlying principles of truth around which the four great religious parties of whom we have been listening are gathered, we do it with defference and the kindliest of feelings."

Mr. McDonald here stated that it was not his purpose to discuss the question "Why am I a Disciple?" for Rev. Solomon Mitzler, A. M., would do that on Sunday evening, June 12th, but he felt sure the congregation would be led to see some reasons for his position in the comparison he was about to make.

"To all listeners," he contiued, "it must have been apparent that all the speakers are at unit in considering their respective positions the ne plus ultra of possibilities in these fields of research. 'Eureka' (I have found it), says Rev. McGaw. 'Eureka,' echo Revs. Sloan, Candee and Hopkins. On turning in their direction we behold them facing the four corners of the theological earth and pointing with intense earnestness at four different objects, wholly absorbed by the same and oblivious to all else, and we are led to think of the Saviour's, 'Lo here, lo there,' without drawing His conclusion. Unity in utterance therefore does not mean unity in object.

"But we will let each speaker declare his position in his own words. Dr. McGaw says: 'A Presbyterian is, first, one who holds to a certain form of church government; and, secondly, one who holds to a certain system of doctrine.' The latter is not the distinctive feature of Presbyterianism since other denominations hold in common the same doctrines. We will therefore note the distinctive feature named in the first, and allow Dr. McGaw to speak again: 'The word Presbyter, as you know, is equivalent to the word Elder. The Greek word from which presbyter is derived is almost the exact synonym of the English word Elder. Presbyterian government is government by the elders of presbyters.....We find (from the New Testament) that the government was in the hands of the elders or prebyters. We learn from Acts 14:23, that churches were organized by the ordination or appointment of elders in every church. Titus was left by Paul in Crete that he might set in order the things that were wanting and appoint elders in every city. See Titus 1:5-7. When Paul was on his way from Macedonia to Jerusalem he sent for the elders of the church of Ephesus, and made a very affecting farewell address to them. In that address he gave to the elders this charge: 'Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the flock, in the which the Holy Ghost hath made you bishops, to feed the church of God, which he purchased with his own blood.' Acts 20:28 (Rev. ver.)......We learn from these passages—others might be quoted, first, that in apostolic times and under apostolic direction, churches were organized by the appointment of elders. That there were elders—a plurality of elders (?) in every church. That their office had relation to the government of the church.....That in the apostolic age the terms presbyter and bishop were used interchangably to designate the same office. Elders were bishops and bishops were elders. As elders or bishops they had the oversight of their respective flocks.....I am a Presbyterian because I like the Presbyterian form of government.'

"In all that has been said Disciples concur. This position is scriptural and correct. There is not the least doubt that the words elder, bishop, overseer, shepherd and pastor are used interchangably, and all apply to the same office. Hence, Disciples have elders, if suitable men can be found in every congregation. We therefore, have embraced in our position all that makes Presbyterians distinctively Presbyterian. Several persons have said since these meetings began, 'Mr. McDonald, are you not afraid to have these men speak in your pulpit? Don't you think there is danger in losing some of your members?' I have answered, 'No.' If we are on stilts the sooner we are tripped up the better. I should not preach a doctrine that I did not feel certain of the correctness of. I, therefore, court everything that leads to investigation. Now, since we occupy the grounds taken by Presbyterians, we need not fear to invite them into our pulpits. Certainly we do not accept that part of their polity which sustains synods, general assemblies, etc., for we do not find any warrant in scripture for it, yet we are in sympathy with, and practice that that makes them Presbyterian."

In like manner we call upon Mr. Sloan, who says:

We believe that baptism is essential to church membership, that there cannot be a church without baptism, at least not a visible church.

We believe that these words refer to persons who were regenerate, that is to say, were in living union with Jesus Christ. They did not come into the church until they first came to Christ. They came to Christ as individuals, on their own responsibility, having been born of the Spirit, and on a baptismal profession of their own faith they were formed into churches. This is the fundamental Baptist doctrine, that of a regenerate church membership.....As to the rite of baptism itself. There are two grand facts set forth in the New Testament—the Saviour's sacrificial death, and His triumphal resurrection. The Christian can never lose sight of these facts. They are fundamental in his experience. He became a new creature in Christ Jesus as a crucified and risen Saviour. The two chief features of his own personal experience correspond to these two external facts. He dies to self, to the world, to Satan; he rises in newness of life to holiness and to God in Christ. These facts in our Lord's life and in the Christian's experience are forcibly set forth by an immersion in water and emersion from it. No other mode of baptism expresses these facts. And when the inspired writers of the New Testament wished to give expression to these glorious facts of death and life, of burial and resurrection, they used Greek words of exact signification. They used words, or rather a word, that meant to dip, to submerge, to plunge, to immerse. There is no doubt upon this point, if we are to trust the scholarship of all ages. The lexicons, Greek grammars, church history, and the symbolic meaning of the ordinance, have been confessed, by Pedobaptist writers, to express this view. No scholar of national reputation dare any longer assert the contrary. Baptism in the New Testament means to immerse, and does not mean anything else.

But men claim the right to substitute another form of baptism, on the ground that the mode is "not essential," that "it is of little importance," that it is only "a form." We sometimes express surprise that men who call Christ Lord can use such a plea to justify an acknowledged change of His ordinance. Certainly, baptism is a form; but it is more than a form, it is a prescribed form setting forth the eternal verities of the gospel; the American flag is a form, but how much does it stand for? In baptism by immersion we obey Christ, and we imitate Him, and by means of it we consecrate ourselves to Him, and publicly profess Him before all the world. Surely that cannot be a barren and meaningless form that marked the beginning of our Saviour's ministry, and the commencement of our Christian life; that was commanded by Him in express words before He ascended to His Father; that was to be done, in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost; that was witnessed itself, in our Lord's case, by the direct presence of the Holy Trinity: Jesus being baptized, the Holy Spirit descending in the form of a dove, and God, the Father, speaking from heaven; and that was to be done only once in a man's life.

This is a great truth, and around it circles the whole Baptist polity. It has the support of every passage of scripture bearing on the subject. Men are to be baptized in (Greek en, not with as in the common version) water—'into the name of the Father,' etc. That this is correct both Rev. Candee and Rev. Hopkins, and all others, admit, for both immerse, even while they may not be willing to admit the logic of their admission, viz.: That if immersion is baptism nothing else is, for nothing else is immersion. And the fact that any and all denominations will accept the immersed believer declares its catholicity. Not all will admit those who are sprinkled, or poured, because they do not believe these forms to have the warrant of the scriptures or the support of Christ's authority. On this platform Disciples stand side by side with Baptists. True, they may look upon the ordinance as finding its support in other premises than those accepted by Baptists, yet they are one as to the action and the action is the distinguishing feature. Disciples therefore feel free to invite Baptists into their pulpits because they have in their position that which makes Baptists distinctively Baptist.

Passing to Congregationalists, Rev. Candee says:

I am a Congregationalist because the polity, doctrine and usages of a Congregational church are identical with those of a Christian church as set forth in the New Testament, and I regard that as a divinely authorized pattern.

A Christian church is an organized body of believers, divinely endowed with authority to receive, discipline or excommunicate its own members; and also to receive or reject its own religious teachers.

It is a congregation of Christian believers, organized in any given locality, for the purposes of fellowship and worship, and is responsible to Christ alone for its faith and practice. This is Congregationalism. And while it grants equal liberty and authority to all, it requires that each shall submit to the decision of the many—shall submit to the church as a duty to Christ, unless the church enjoins some faith or practice which would require a violation of individual conscience.

With many other quotations he fortifies his position by the following:

Cor. i:2: Paul writes "Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints." Here the sanctified in Christ, those that are called to be saints at Corinth are the church in that locality. Col. iv:15: "Salute the brethren that are in Ladoicea, and Nymphas, and the church which is in his house." Certainly this church is a local body.

The references to such distinct local churches are very numerous. Paul speaks of teaching "everywhere in every church." (1 Cor. iv:17). Not everywhere in every "society" or "branch" or part of the church, but everywhere in every church.

Then, these churches are spoken of in the plural number. Acts ix:31: "Then had the churches rest throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria and were edified." Acts xiv:41: "And he went through Syria and Cilicia confirming the churches." Acts xvi:5: "So were the churches established in the faith." Rev. i:40: "John to the seven churches in Asia."

It must be conceded then that a local congregation of believers, organized for the purpose of Christian fellowship, work and worship is entitled to the sacred name of Church; and if this term applies to no other organized body, it follows that these local churches possess all the powers and offices, are capable of performing all the functions, and do bear all the responsibilities, and receive all the honors and blessings of Churches of Jesus Christ.

Hence, the fuller development of the argument requires the statement, which needs no proof, that this holy appelation, and these sacred immunities are given, in the New Testament, to no other visible organic body.

It must be evident to every careful student of the scriptures that the Congregationalists' idea of church organization is correct. The word ekklesia means assembly or congregation and this only. A reference to the 110 places in the New Testament in which the word ekklesia (church) is found, will convince of the correctness of this, for 56 times it is designated by local names as "church in Corinth," "church at Jerusalem," etc. Thirty-five times it is used in the plural, and in the other nineteen references there is not a straw pointing in any other direction. And this is the position taken by Disciples. The power is in the local congregation. The actions of its elders must receive the sanction of the church to make it valid. And any officer may be removed at any time sufficient grounds for change by the voice of the congregation. We then have placed the fundamental principle of Congregationalism in our position, and are perfectly free to invite Congregationalists into our pulpits, having no fears of consequences.

Rev. Hopkins comes later with his plea for Episcopalianism. Whatever this may mean in English it stands in America for unity. Hear him:

St. Paul, 1 Cor. i:10-13, forbids divisions: "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye speak the same things and that there be no divisions among you, but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment. For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions among you. Now this I say, that every one of saith, I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas, and I of Christ. Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? Or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?

Here he rebukes such personal preference for various ministers as we now freely indulge in every denomination, and much more would he condemn divisions into contradictory sects? He afterwards describes the unity of the visible church on earth to be like that of the human body.

Now while we may not accept his method of union with its Episcopal idea, yet we cannot deny that oneness is a strongly empasized doctrine of the scriptures. For it Christ prayed. To it the Apostles urged Christians and without it no great results will ever follow Christian effort. And but for this Disciples of Christ would not be a distinct and separate people. That the divided sons of God might come together Thomas Campbell wrote his "Declaration and Address," assisted in forming the "Christian Association" of Washington county, Pennsylvania, in the year 1808. Upon the proposition "The holy scriptures are all-sufficient, as the subject matter of faith and rule of conduct," the work began. And the motto, "Where the Scriptures speak we speak, and where the Scriptures are silent we are silent," was adopted. This led to the rejection of infant baptism and later to the immersion of believers as adopted by Disciples everywhere. Hence, the keynote of this movement is unity and union. And the platform we have adopted is so broad that it embraces the fundamental distinctive principles of all evangelical denominations, and offers a place for the feet of all on the sure rock—the word of God.

Hence, you see we have not made a single sacrifice in throwing open our pulpit to all who have spoken. We desire union. We work for union, and, though we are but 64 years old, we have, while failing to get people to see through our eyes, succeeded in bringing together 1,000,000 souls, who all stand ready to welcome union of Christians, no matter on what road it may come. We verily believe, however, that when it comes it must come in our direction, since there is no other way for it to take.

A second great fact is worthy of notice. All the speakers agreed there were Christians outside of their communions. In this they have admitted that their communions were not necessary to the perpetuation of Christianity. Hence, Christianity is something apart from rule by the presbytery, immersion, church organization or Christian unity. This is the position long held by the Disciples of Christ. They have not founded their plea on any, or all the positions named. They have vindicated their right to exist on the Kingship authority of the divine Christ. He is the "all and in all" of their theory, though they have fallen woefully short of living up to their privileges. Rulership, ordimatters, organizations, etc., are secondary matters. They are but the clothing of spiritual things, and the body is more than raiment. Hence, in perfect harmony with the declarations of our different brethren, to whom you have listened, we stand not as a denomination, though we must bear that name, but as the advocates of entire submission to the expressed will of Christ, in all things, and are ever ready to extend a hand of brotherly love to all who, even though ignorantly, seek to do the will of God.

To this end we take no name upon us but that of Christian or disciple, not that we would monopolize the name, but that no barrier may be placed between us and others. And every speaker who has addressed you is willing to adopt that name. And we are willing that they shall wear it. We do not see the necessity, however, for the terms Presbyterian Christian, Baptist Christian, Congregational Christian, Methodist Christian, etc. And I feel certain no one should be offended at our accepting a name which we are willing to apply to all who are followers of Christ.

With all evangelical Christians we believe in the inspiration of the scriptures and the divintiy of the Son of God. And while Christianity is older than the written record, yet with them, we appeal to it as final authority. It reveals to us the human-divine and the divine-human, and, through Him, in his flesh-life, makes known to us the Father.

In conclusion, we, as Disciples of Christ, feel secure, and "looking unto Jesus" cry "Eureka." Others may be right, they may be wrong. We cannot be wrong so long as we appeal to Christ's words, in matters of polity, as well as of faith and practice. We, Philip like, say to all Nathanael's "Come and see." If ye continue in my words, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free.

We are not offish or sticklers for forms, but are ready to come to any Christian people who will put down the bars (the practice and requirements of non-essentials) and let us join them.

We would urge all to look to Jesus and accept His teachings and example, and to move towards Him that without a thought of union all may converge and finally meet in Him as the spokes of a wheel in the hub. May God bless you all.

CHURCH DANCES.

It All Depends on Locality, Training and Tradition.

While some of our good church fathers in this country are inveighing against the stepping of youthful feet to music, the strict church of Spain is ordering the dance of the choir boys as part of their sacred service. A writer in the Spectator thus describes the ceremony and gives its history:

The license and disorder of carnival has always led the clergy to look upon it with a certain degree of disfavor, and it has long been the custom to open the churches for special devotions during the three days perceding Lent, in reparation of the scandals of the streets and public places. In Seville, as elsewhere, the sacrament is exposed during the season, and the churches are filled with worshipers. But there is one custom peculiar to Seville, which now really forms the prettiest scene to be viewed during the carnival, although it is religious, not secular, and is a protest against the licentious gaities fo the time. This custom is the dancing of the little choir boys of the cathedral before the host every evening at 5 o'clock. Above the high altar, blazing with wax tapers, the host is exposed in a magnificent silver ostensorium, surmounted by a huge silver crown; the illumination of the sanctuary is completed by a row of tall and massive silver candelabra standing outside the rail. As soon as vespers, compline and matins are ended, the archbishop ascends to his throne on the north side of the sanctuary; the canons, in their purple mantles, follow, and kneel in rows on each side; then in the space before the altar 10 little choir-boys (seises) take their stand in two ranks of five, facing each other. The boys are dressed as pages of the seventeenth century, with jackets of red and white in stripes, white knee breeches, stockings and satin shoes; in their hands they hold white hats, broad-brimmed and high crowned, with drooping plumes of red and white feathers. After "Tantum Ergo" has been sung, to the accompaniment of a full orchestra, the boys begin a hymn in Spanish to a bright and charming air. When this is ended, they genuflect, put their hats on their heads, and begin their dance, still singing to the accompaniment of the orchestra. The dance is slow and stately, like the old minuet, with a pause between each step; the boys wind in and out, form various figures, and end with a pirouette. At the completion of the hymn, the orchestra continues the air, and the boys accompany it with castanets, still dancing. The ceremony is then repeated, with another hymn and different music, and the whole performance lasts 20 minutes. At its conclusion, "Tantum Ergo" is again sung, while every one kneels; the archbishop gives his benediction, and departs with his attendants, the people crowding round, as he goes down the church to kiss his episcopal ring.

Many Protestants, and even Roman Catholics, may be scandalized when they hear of dancing as part of a church service; above all, of dancing in fancy costume, and with covered heads. Such, at any rate, was the feeling of a former pope, who sent a commission to inquire into this ceremony, unknown except at the cathedral of Seville, and there only practised at the carnival, the festival of the Conception in December, and that of Corpus Christi in the summer. The papal commissioner, however, reported that the whole thing was decently and reverently performed, and that the covering of the head was simply the ancient Spanish custom; and so the supreme authority of the church could only give its approval to a harmless and charming ceremony, which perhaps forms a useful counter-attraction to the masked balls and other spectacles of the streets and theaters. The origin of the dancing is not attested by any documentary evidence, but it is believed to date from the conquest of Seville by St. Ferdinand from the Moors. It is a survival, in fact, of the miracle plays accompanied by music and dancing in honor of the sacrament, which are chiefly known to European readers outside Spain through the beautiful compositions of Calderon. The "Autos" of Calderon carried these performances to the highest point of literary art, but they had been customary in Spain throughout the middle ages at Corpus Christi and other festivals. Not only boys but also women used to dance before the host, until this part of the ceremony was suppressed by authority.

The music employed at the church dances in Seville is the property of the chapter, and strangers, are not, as a rule, allowed to see the scores. Mr. Lomas, however, who mentions these dances in his book of travels in Spain, gives two of the airs sung at the festival of the Conception; at the carnival and Corpus Christi, entirely different words and airs are used. It is rumored that in deference to modern sentiment, the dances will be discontinued before long; but if this is to be the case, many will certainly regret the disappearance of one more picturesque scene, and one more survival of mediaeval life.

FACING A LION.

Howa Rube Got the Better of a Fakir.

In one of the side shows connected with the circus was a cage with a single lion in it. On the cage was a placard reading: "This beast has killed ten men. One thousand dollars to any one who dares enter his cage." A big sign to the same effect was hung up out doors, and those who didn't go in to see the fat boy and the mermaid surely wanted to gaze on the lion. There was a good crwod in and the lecturer was about to begin on the memaid, when a little old man, who was bowlegged and humpbacked, crowded to the front and said:

"Look here, I want to try for that thousand dollars. Gimme a show at that lion."

"My friend, do you want to be torn into dog meat?" asked the lecturer in reply. "You wouldn't live thirty seconds after entering the cage."

"Is he a Numidian lion?"

"He is, and one of the most savage beasts ever captured."

"Killed ten men, eh?"

"He has."

"Wall, I'd like to tackle him. If he kills me that will be 'leven. I want that thousand dollars mighty bad, and I'm willing to run considerable risk. Gimme a fair show, will ye?"

"You keep right away from his cage. No man in liquor should get within ten feet of a Numidian lion."

"I haven't drunk a drop of licker in ten years!" indignantly exclaimed the old man. "Darn you and your Numidian lion to boot! You ain't willing to give a man a show!"

He backed off, and the lecturer delivered the usual oration on the mermaid. He was about to begin on the fat boy, when the Numidian lion uttered a series of roars, and everybody's attention was attracted to the cage. The little old man had slipped around and opened the door and entered. Not only that, but he had that lion by the tail, and was drawing him backward around the cage. Men shouted and women shrieked, and the lecturer rushed forward and shrieked:

"Man! man!- you must be mad!"

"Never felt better natured in my life!" replied the old man, as he stopped to rest.

"Come out or you'll be torn to pieces!"

"I rayther guess not! There's only one Numidian critter in here, and he don't seem to be on the tear very much. He-up here, you mossback, and take another promenade!"

He was drawing the beast around the cage again, when the lecturer entered it and said something in a low voice.

"Make it ten and I'll do it!" replied the old man in loud tones. "You said you'd give a thousand, but being it's hard times for money I'll let yo off easy. Make 'er ten and pay me before I let go of his tail."

It was handed to him then and there, and he descended, wiped his hands on the grass, and feelingly observed to the circle of admirers:

"Durn my hide, but when a man brings any sort of a thing into this town and sends out a defi I'm right on deck! That's the first critter from Numidia I ever tackled, but I'll be looking for more from this on. Everybody come out and have some good red lemonade with me!"—New York Sun.

DANGEROUS TRADES.

Trade horrors formed the staple evidence and illustrations submitted to Mr. Mundella and his fellow-labor commissioners. Mr. Girling, of the National Coopers' society, produced a great muzzle consisting of 52 layers of flannel, which, he explained, the men had to wear when fastening up casks of bleaching powder. Even with the muzzle on he had known men carried out insensible. Mr. Tom Mann fitted the muzzle on his own face to test its discomfort. The witness further declared he had seen young women employed in white lead factories who, when they were paid, were unable to pick their wages up off the counter because the white-lead poisoning produced a disease in the joints. In the salt cake trade the men have to keep a "rag" in their mouths through which they breathe, and their teeth are generally worn down to the gums and blackened.—London Telegraph.

JOURNALISTIC ITEM.

A young man of ability but not of much means, was talking about starting a newspaper in Houston, Texas, and was telling a friend about it.

"You can borrow $50 and start a new paper," said the friend, encouragingly.

"You darned fool!" replied the would-be journalist, "if I could borrow $50 what would I want to start a paper for? I want to start a paper so I can borrow the $50."—Texas Siftings.

Scribner's is unusually fine in the way of illustrations. "On the Great Cattle Trail," the frontispiece engraving, is a study for a painter. An Ascent of Mount Etna, by A. F. Jaccaci, is a charming descriptive paper, made doubly so by the accompanying views. The Return of the Year, is a poetic fancy, prettily clothed, by Archibald Lampman. Frances H. Burnett's "Drury Lane Boys' Club: What it grew from, what it is and what we hope it will be," is a paper full of interest and suggestion. Historic Moments: A Memory of the Chicago Fire; After Sunset, a dainty poem by Graham R. Tomson; the conclusion of Robert Grant's Reflections of a Married Man; Cattle Trails of the Prairies, by Charles Moreau Harger; Sea Beaches, and the Wrecker (concluded) are all entertaining and instructive reading. Life in New York Tenement Houses, as Seen by a City Missionary (the third article in the series of "The Poor in Great Cities"), by Wm. T. Elsing, is a most impressive contribution, and, like the preceding ones, may be recommended for thoughtful study as touching the most important subject of the day and age. Rapid Transit in Cities, II., the Solution, by Thomas Curtis Clarke, is bristling with practical points. "The Point of View" is thoroughly delightful and the number a good one throughout.

The Magazine of Art opens with a fine frontispiece—an etching by F. Krostewitz from Schreyer's painting: "On the Road in Wallachia." Six Illustration of Royal Academy pictures for 1892 are given. The second paper on Glimpses of Artist Life, by M. H. Spielmann, is charmingly written and profusely illustrated. A sketch of George Du Maurier presents four illustrations by the inimitable artist. Game Birds and Shooting Sketches has illustrations drawn by Millais. A Review of Meryon, is accompanied by his portrait, from Flameng. The second paper on the Dixon Bequest at Bethnal Green (water colors) gives six fine illustrations. Fourteen choice engravings are presented in "Our Illustrated Note-Book." Art notes and chronicles complete a beautiful number. Cassell & Co., New York; $3.50 a year.

Littell's Living Age for the week ending May 28 presents an exceptionally attractive table of contents: a sketch of William of Germany from the Contemporary Review; a pretty Spanish story by Gertrude Atherton, from Blackwood's; concluding biographical chapters of Benjamin Robert Haydon, from Temple Bar; the Balearics from Cornhill; a well-written review of Mr. Law's three-volume history of Hampton Court, from McMillan's; Six in a Lava-flow—at Teneriffe, Blackwood's; a Paris Correspondent of 1753, Longman's; Early Days of French Newspapers, Spectator; the Church Dances in Seville and the usual page of well-chosen poetry. To be without "Littell's" weekly on the reading table is to miss a great deal and to fail to place every number on the shelves is to omit a link in the best current literature. Littell & Co., Bedford street, Boston. Complete sets of the Living Age are offered for sale at discount rates. Address the publishers.

The delightful Emerson-Thoreau correspondence is continued in the June number of the Atlantic. The Education of the Negro, by W. T. Harris, is a thoughtful paper. There are a few writers who give an entertaining quality to whatever their pens touch. Agnes Repplier is one of these. Aggrippina is a cat, but the story of her is pleasing and full of "keen insight into animal nature." Nuremberg is a graceful poem by Julia C. R. Dorr. An American at Home in Europe, and Private Life in Ancient Rome are other papers of note among the many good things in this number.

The Review of Reviews is emphatically "The Busy Man's Magazine." The current topics of the day in all countries and culled from all sources are here, well-arranged and the reader has only to turn the pages and read. Considerable space is given in the June number to Mr. Blaine and his commercial policy, a picture of the secretary furnishing the frontispiece. The number is profusely illustrated. Gov. Boies, Wm. Holman, J. C. Burrows, T. J. Coolidge, Wm. E. Curtis and Senator Dawes are some of the other American faces. Relief Work in Russia, and Indian Education are two topics treated quite exhaustively. This monthly cyclopedia is only $2.50 a year; published 15 Astor Place, New York.

The Church at Home and Abroad is an especially interesting number this month, presenting along with church topics a great variety of miscellaneous good reading. Presbyterian Board of Education, Philadelphia, Pa.; $1 a year.

The North American Review gives first place to the Harrison Administration as viewed by Senators Dawes, Dolph, and Colquitt. Murat Halstead reviews Senator Stewart and the silver problem in connection with him. Hon. Dorman B. Eaton, ex-president of the civil service commission, contributes a paper on the Perils of Re-electing Presidents and makes some strong points therein. Amelia E. Barr writes from "the Servant Girl's Point of View," Edward Bellamy reviews the Progress of Nationalism in the United States.

The New England opens with a comprehensive review of "Art in Chicago," by Lucy B. Munroe. The frontispiece is an engraving, by Lamont Brown, of Rossetti's Beatrix. The Government of Cities," by Moorfield Story, is a practical, incisive paper, full of good suggestions. Gen. Armstrong and the Hampton Institute, is an entertaining paper containing much information, written by Edwin A. Start, and profusely illustrated. Mary F. Haynes contributes a good story: The Squire's Niece Maria. The Ship Columbia and the Discovery of Oregon, a History of the Christian Endeavor movement, stories, poems and well-filled departments make up an exceptionally bright number. A full page sketch (from a model in clay) of Edward Everett Hale, with an appreciative review of his literary labors embellish the closing pages. Mr. Hale was the father of the New England and may take a right royal pride in his sturdy and growing brain-child.

The Literary Digest is one of the most valued weekly reviews that comes to the Bee table. Its matter is well selected, from the world's periodicals, and well-arranged. It enables the busy person to keep abreast of the times with no effort beyond intelligent reading and comprehension. The Bee recommends it to both the general reader and the student. Funk & Wagnalls, publishers, $3 a year.

The Continental Illustrated Magazine is added to the Bee's list of current monthly reading. It is a handsome, well-edited magazine. An Easter poem in its columns, written by a Toledo woman, has escaped previous notice. The graceful stanzas are these:

The Resurrection.

When Mary hastened with her balms and spices
To weep once more above the sacred dead,
If she had found the sepulchre of Jesus
With door still sealed, and still death-tenanted;

Had found no waiting angel with those tidings
From which the world's new hope, new faith were born—
How had the nations fared through all the ages
That outward stretch from that first Easter morn?

—Margaret Lawless.

The "Two Tales" for May 21. are: "The Hurricane Driver," by Mary Hartwell Catherwood, and "Across the Way," by Robert Grant. Both are good stories, the first the better of the two. This new idea in stories is published at 8 Beacon street, Boston, Mass., every Saturday. Ten cents a copy; $4 a year.

Notes.

Another contribution to the Bacon-Shakepeare controversy has appeared. It is published by W. F. Wigston & Co., London, Eng., and imported to this country by Schulte & Co., Chicago. It is an octavo of 482 pages and deals not at all with any "cipher" mystery, but only with histories of the two men, and page after page of parallelisms that are found in their books. Whatever the student's opinion, whatever his prejudices, these repetitions of thought and words are simply unaccountable. They can not be coincidences; they can scarcely be plagiarisms—what is the solution?

Cassell & Co. are the authorized publishers of Grover Cleveland's writings and speeches, which are now in press.

Few of the many readers of Pierre Loti's charming stories know that while he was still best known as Julien Viaud he was dubbed Loti (the Japanese for violet) by his fellow-officers in the French navy, on account of his modest and retiring disposition. He therefore assumed Loti as a surname when looking about for a pen name.

M. Loti can scarcely thank the reviewers who have been telling that he is the hero of his own romances, as he is a respectable benedict and has a moral as well as literary reputation at stake. He is a poet, and an artist in word pictures, whatever else he may or may not be.

Ambrose Bierce, the recognized critic of the Californian coast, on W. D. Howells:

"The master of this detestable school of literature is Mr. Howells. Absolutely destitute of that supreme and sufficient literary endowment, imagination, he does not what he would, but what he can; takes notes with his eyes and ears, and writes them up as does any other reporter.

"He can tell nothing that he has not seen or heard, and in his personal progress through rectangular streets and between trim hedges of Philistia, with lettered old maids of his acquaintance courtesying from doorways, he has seen and heard nothing worth telling. Yet, tell it he must, and having told, defend.

"For years this diligent insufferable has been conducting a department of criticism in Harper's Magazine with the sole purpose of expounding at the expense of his employers, thought, theories and principles which are the offspring of his own limitations.

"He has now shifted his smug personality and his factory of little wooden men and women on wheels to the Cosmopolitan, and his following of fibrous virgins, fat matrons and oleaginous clergymen has probably gone with him to cheer and direct him in pulling down that periodical to the level of inanity from which his successor will have to try to pull up the other."

Jean Ingelow lives at Kensington with the brother who helped her to publish her first volume of poems—the volume of which four editions were sold in the first year after its publication, and that has now reached its twenty-sixth edition. Miss Ingelow's father was a banker, and she was the youngest of eleven children. Her first verses and songs were written on the back of certain inside shutters in a room up in the old home in Lincolnshire. Miss Ingelow, like so many women writers, became too interested in philanthropic work and too much impressed with the world's need of active workers, to dream her life away in framing poesies. But no fresher, brighter, sweeter fancies are clothed in the beautiful English language, than some of those to be found in the modest volume which first appeared in 1863 and was immediately hailed in both her only country and America as the work of true poetic genius and inspiration.

Lord Tennyson is the oldest English author living, his first book having been published in 1830. Mr. Gladstone comes next, his pamphlet, "The State in its Relations with the Church," appearing eight year later. And both are yet doing good literary work.

ABOUT PEOPLE.

Miss Charlotte M. Yonge, the author, has given $10,000 for building a missionary college at Auckland, New Zealand.

The nearest living relative of Shakespeare is probably Thomas Hart, a resident of Australia, who is eighth in descent from Shakespeare's sister, Joan.

Bishop Brooks says the way to start a church is not to wait until a few leading families call for one, but to start the church first and call in the families afterward.

Rev. J. W. Wilson, of Indianapolis, has entered upon a vigorous crusade against church fairs, grab-bags, raffles, and all other schemes to raise funds for church purposes in illegitimate ways.

The queen of Denmark is particularly clever in millinery, a talent which has been inherited by her three daughters—the empress of Russia, the princess of Wales and the duchess of Cumberland.

H. S. Greenleaf, the democratic representative from the Rochester district, says he will not run again for congress, but will pass the remainder of his life in travel. He has made a fortune in manufacturing and is anxious to spend a part of it in a tour of Europe.

Among the delegates to the national republican convention are Senators Felton, Teller, Wolcott, Higgins, Shoup, Cullom, Hiscock and Quay and ex-Senators Ingalls, Sewell, Miller, Platt, Kellogg, Mahone, and Spooner. Representatives Townsend, Sweet, and Bingham will also be there, as well as McKinley, Cannon, Gear, McComas, Neidringhaus, Evans, Langston and Warner and several ex-governors.

Gladstone buys so many books that he invariably demands a discount of 10 per cent. from his booksellers. The story is told that when a dealer in the Strand refused to give the discount to the G. O. M. because he was not a bookseller, the ex-premier replied: "I buy books and I sell them when they have served my purpose; I ought to have the discount." But the bookseller refused to give it.

This story of Rev. Lyman Beecher, father of Henry Ward Beecher, was told originally by his son: The elder Beecher had been preaching one Sunday at Litchfield, and, as he got into the carriage to go home, he remarked that he had never preached such a poor sermon before. "Why, father," said Henry, "I never heard you preach louder." "That's it," replied the old man, "when I have nothing to say I always holler."

SELF-MADE TOLEDOANS.

Brief Sketches of Men You Meet Every Day.

L. S. Baumgardner's Success at Onion Raising.

An Ohioan by Birth He Seeks New Pastures, but Returns Discouraged and Finds Success on His Native Heath.

"How is fishing at Middle Bass?" a Bee asked Mr. L. S. Baumgardner, who has just returned from a week's fishing at the beautiful island in Lake Erie.

"First rate, but do you know that, though I caught some fine fish at Kelley's Island, I did not enjoy it half as much as I used to do 50 years ago when, as a small boy, I fished with a pin and hook on the banks of the Kilbuck down in Wayne county."

The conversation naturally turned on early days and the Bee during the casual conversation secured some interesting facts regarding Mr. B's early life.

Leander S. Baumgardner was born in Wayne county, near Wooster, Ohio, February 10, 1832, and worked on a farm until his 21st year, helping to clear up a farm in Wayne county, one of the most heavily timbered counties in the state, meant hard work and plenty of it.

At the age of 10 years he was "bound out" to a neighboring farmer. After serving five years under an unusually hard task-master, one fine Sunday morning in May he deliberately packed his baggage, which consisted of an extra pair of Kentucky jean pants and a cotton shirt. He started with his pack and walked six miles to Wooster, where, finding his guardian, who was then acting county treasurer who seeing his scanty wardrobe kept him under strict orders not to show himself on the streets until he could get him a new suit which he did early Monday morning. With this new suit and new shoes one can imagine that he felt ready for anything.

Young Baumgardner commenced hustling on his guardian's farm, working for him five years, the last three years of which he worked this farm on shares, and at the age of 21 he had earned and saved up $600, having taught school one winter term. This $600 was his first capital, and joining two brothers they organized the firm of J. H. Baumgardner & Co., buying a stock of drugs, books and stationery and groceries at Wooster, Ohio. It can be imagined that a capital of $1,800 would not stock up a very large concern.

His first year's experience as a merchant shows the fruit of early training on the farm. Farmers, those days, had but little spending money, and never spent that little, unless absolutely necessary.

He got through the first year for just $103, by bunking on the counter of the store and taking his meals at a neighbor's, for which he paid $1 per week. This will indicate the settled economical results of early agricultural training on farm life. This economy and close application to business very soon began to show good results and gained for the firm the confidence of the people, and success was early assured. They pushed steadily to the front, and in 1857, the year of great financial depression, found them engaged in building a store room 180 feet deep containing the first public hall of any note that Wooster had up to that time. Believing in advertising, they issued their own paper called the "Calathumpian," a monthly. The cost of this paper was mostly borne by the venders of patent medicine, whose ads. were inserted, charging liberally for them. After moving into the new building about the first of January, 1858, they changed the name of the paper to "The Arcodome Agitator," after the new building. This they continued to issue until Mr. B. sold out his interest to his older brother, J. H. Baumgardner, in 1865.

Early in the spring of 1858, after counting the cost carefully, and making a clear inventory of his assets young Baumgardner concluded that he could support a wife, providing she could help a little, and making known his conclusions to one of Akron's fair damsels to his great surprise and delight she fully agreed with him, so they have doubled-teamed it, so to speak, ever since.

He soon undertook to build a new home on Bell avenue, which he had completed about January 1, 1860, and moved into it. They continued to prosper in business during the years of the war, when in January, 1865, finding that either one of the three brothers had sufficient means to continue the business, L. S. sold his interest to J. H. Baumgardner, and selling his home he pocketed the proceeds and thought he would again try farming. He purchased, with his brother-in-law, a fine farm at Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, and thought he would settle for life. Mr. B. tells the following story anent his second experience in farming:

"Upon returning to farm life, naturally my first inquiry was as to what crop would pay best. As onions were then worth $3 per bushel everybody was talking onions as the most profitable crop to raise. So I concluded to try onions. I planted one acre. After preparing the ground craefully the seed was properly planted, and after waiting for weeks very patiently, the tiny tops began to appear, and then how to keep down the weeds, etc., was the question. After months of patient weeding and care, the crop was ready for harvest and I gathered about 75 bushels to the acre, but, when I came to sell them I found that all my neighbors had raised onions, too, and the price had dropped from $3 to about 75 cents per bushel, with no buyers at that. This, of course, knocked all the poetry out of farming and I concluded to sell the farm, which I succeeded in doing at an advance of $2,500, this making the year average fairly well."

"How did you come to start in the mercantile business?"

"Well, I again concluded to try merchandising. Acting upon this conclusion, a tour of investigation was organized. My object was, of course, to start a wholesale drug house, so with $25,000 in bank, I started west to look up a location, stopping at Ft. Wayne, St. Louis and Kansas City. This place being nearer my size, I believe I should have located there had it not been for the Missouri river water. Drinking some of this on my trip from St. Louis, I was affected so seriously that by the time I reached Kansas City I was in such a demoralized condition that I did not have the most exalted admiration for Missouri river water, and being told that the people there grew fat on it, and remembering the effect it had on me, I naturally concluded that they took me for a sucker, so I moved on to Topeka, Kansas, and this Missouri river water may be charged with losing Kansas City a merchant. Kansas did not strike me favorably. I next stopped at Leavenworth, Kansas, Council Bluffs, (Omaha) was not in it then."

"How did you strike Toledo," the Bee asked.

"I next took in Chicago, and finally stopped over at Toledo; feeling pretty well exhausted and very much discouraged, looking up Mr. French, a former resident of Wooster, Ohio, the only man I knew in the city. With him I made a thorough canvass of the town. Finding the ground well occupied, he advised a change of business, recommending wholesale notions, believing this to be nearer my size, I concluded to try it and renting rooms on the second and third floors over what was then O. S. Bond's shoe store, I decided to cast my lot with Toledo and Toledo people. That was in the fall of 1866. In March, 1867, the firm of L. S. Baumgardner & Co. commenced business in Toledo."

"What was your early experience in business here?" the Bee inquired.

"Our first purchase was on a very conservative basis, because the line of goods to be handled was entirely new to me. I knew none of the trade, so you see that we had everything to learn. Our first purchase amounted to only $8,000. As goods were still held at war prices, it will readily occur that it was a very difficult task to make a showing on the shelves. In fact we were compelled to take small boxes out of the cartons, and thus using both empty cartons and boxes and packages, we were able to fill up most of the holes on our shelves. In this way we made quite a showing of stock. You can imagine the "sand" necessary to enter this field in competition with old houses having an established trade and carrying from $100,000 to $200,000 of stock. With this beginning we entered the ring 26 years ago and are still in it. Our sales the first year were $106,000, the second year $184,-000, and they have continued to gradually increase until they have exceeded three-fourths of a million dollars."

Mr. B. was elected first president of the Tri-State fair, helped to organize and run it successfully for five years, paying an annual dividend on the stock besides large premiums, always redeeming every pledge. Politically, he has always been a republican.

"As a politician, I cannot boast of being much of a success," he said recently talking on the subject. "I am very sure that you cannot work the machine under the same rule as business. In business, the successful business man must make good every pledge; his word, to win, must be as good as his bond. In politics you just reverse the rule and your chances are good; it is true that wherever a politician undertakes the solution of a business problem, you invariably witness a most dismal failure. All of our public improvements, as well as our public enterprises are living monuments of the truth of this statment."

In addition to numerous other enterprises he is president of the Fremont Furniture & Cot company, and president and manager of the Toledo Cotton Mills company.

Speaking of real estate, he said: "I feel that my efforts in this line has produced more far reaching results for the city than in any other branch of business. I am most proud of the developments of Collingwood, Parkwood, Robinwood and Glenwood. My efforts with others here, have opened up and built up what is now certain to be the very best residence portion of Toledo, and this is so largely the result of good business judgment and management in the early handling of this property that this marvelous success, is, I think, a record to be proud of."

He is now a member and supporter of St. Mark's Episcopal church, a member of its vestry, and treasurer.

TOLEDO REAL ESTATE.

A Good-Sized Jog Keeps Up all Along the Line,

And This State is Liable to Continue.

The Views of Some of the Dealers—New Additions—Transfers for the Week Just Closing.

Real estate is moving with old-time vigor again.

The few days of warm weather and sunshine had a wonderful effect on business.

With the constant downpour of rain of the last six weeks, business in all branches as well as real estate was simply demoralizing, and it will take some time to recuperate.

The encouraging feature of the business just at present is the extensive foreign enquiry which prevails.

A number of dealers are negotiating with outside capitalists who have heard of Toledo and her splendid prospects, and want to invest some money in her property. Other dealers are figuring with parties who propose to locate manufacturing interests in Toledo.

Thus the business grinds on. Some deals go through, a great many more fail, but in the end Toledo is better off for her real estate dealers.

T. P. Brown's Views.

"I am not selling any property at present, and do not want to," remarked T. P. Brown to a Bee this morning. "I would much rather buy than sell. Yes, indeed; I have the utmost confidence in Toledo property. We hear a great many complaints about the low price and slow increase of property, but I say it's all right. Every inch of Toledo property is increasing in value every day. That the increase is slow is quite true, but this is all the better. If you look into the career of our most successful enterprises to-day, you will find that they did not establish their immense business in a year, or in a half score of years, but it grew, slowly and solidly. So it is with Toledo real estate. It is growing in value, slow but sure, which makes an investment all the safer and more certain of valuable returns."

New Additions.

Toledo is growing and improving in every direction.

Slowly but surely the farm land with its truck patches and broad fields, are being transformed by the surveyor, into regular city property.

It is true Toledo is scattered over a vast amount of territory, but it is all well and good, so long as this territory is being built up and imporved every year.

Many new additions, embracing hundreds of acres of farm land has been platted this year and placed on the market.

The following is a brief description of the new additions platted since January 1:

Nearing's sub-division of lot 361, Stickney's Third addition, 6 lots, 33 by 140, on the corner of Ash and Ontario streets.

Nearing's sub division of lots 281 and 282, Stickney's Third addition, 6 lots, 35 by 125, between Michigan and Ontario streets.

Bolles' Place, 36 lots, 50 by 150, on the corner of Collingwood and Ashland avenues.

J. W. Gunnels' sub-division of lot 514, Yondota division, 5 lots, corner of Fifth and Starr avenue.

Western avenue addition, 127 lots, corner of Miller street and Western avenue.

Cherry Heights, triangular tract, between Cherry street, Fulton street and Central avenue, 10 lots, 102 by 38.

Macomber & Moore's platting, 98 lots, between Licking, Colorado, Dwege street and Mott avenue.

Ross Hill addition, 55 lots on the corner of Andrews and Tracy streets, 30 by 115.

Hiett's sub-division of lots 183, 184, 185 and 186 of Stickney's Second addition, 16 lots, between Erie and Superior streets, 30 by 150.

Russell & Throop's First addition, 35 lots, between Sotuh street, and the canal on Hiett avenue.

Daly & Losee's Central View addition, 41 lots on the corner of Front street and East Broadway.

McCaskey's Yondota street addition, 21 lots on Tracy street.

Extension of Mulberry addition, 291 lots, 30 by 100 feet, on Moore street, between Mulberry street and Stickney avenue.

Jewel Place, 145 lots, between Central avenue, Detroit avenue and Georgia avenue and the L. S. railroad.

R. A. and V. H. Ketcham's sub-division of lots 187, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195 and 196 of Stickney's Third addition, 36 lots, on the corner of Erie and Buckeye streets.

Transfers of the Week.

Charles Butler to Gustave Valentine, part of lot 830, Port Lawrence, $600.

THE SPORTS OF A WEEK

What the Base Ball Tossers are Doing.

Incidents of the Diamond in General.

Talk Among the Men Who Own Fast Horses—Miscellaneous Mention.

There is a sumptuous feast this year for the followers of fistic sport. First of all comes the Sullivan and Corbett fight in importance on September 7. The Johnson-Dixon match on June 27, the Myer-McAuliffe mill which has not been dated as yet. Billy Murphy against Johnny Murphy, and many other rattling events in the arena. There are seldom in one year so many prominent fistic events. We have the fight for the heavy-weight, middle-weight, light-weight and feather-weight championship of the world. The bantam-weight, or 110-pound championship being won recently by Billy Plimmer, of England. It is also remarkable that all this sport will occur within a few months. Who says that milling is a game of the past?

Captain Adrian C. Anson is evidently becoming more philosophical as the years go by. He meets defeat more calmly and looks into the future with a hopeful eye. He sat on a lounge in one of the corridors surrounded by a group of players, who were discussing the strength of the various eastern clubs and accounting for victories and defeats. Anson sat still and gave an attentive ear to the discussion.

The big Chicago chieftain wore a black business suit, and from a light tie sparkled a diamond. He kept his hands in his pockets and kept shifting his hat up and down on his forehead by pressing it against the wall. His glass arm occasionally gave a twist, as though to indicate that there was still life in it, and that it was not giving its big owner any trouble.

In reviewing the situation the Chicago captain said: "In the west there is only one club in the race, and that is Chicago. No one will dispute that fact and I suppose you have heard of it. As for the east, Brooklyn, I think, is the strongest team. Boston has a good club, but not as strong as Ward's, and I look to the latter to overtake the men of the modern Athens.

"I do not mean that either of these clubs will win the championship, for the Chicagos will certainly do that in the first half of the season. We are now third in the race, and on this trip have 21 games to play. At the speed we are traveling 12 victories are not too many to calculate on. My men are now all in condition and are all with me on the trip. Luby has recovered from his recent attack of biliousness and he will pitch good ball on the trip, as will all the other pitchers. I have only 12 men on the team, the 13th, Tom Burns, having been released to Pittsburg, as you know.

"Will I sign any new men? Certainly. I am looking for a promising youngster now, and if I find one I will sign him, even if he is the thirteenth man. We won three straight games with thirteen players and after I threw the rabbit's foot away."

"Is the interest in the game reviving?"

"There is no doubt about it, although the weather has been against us. As it grows clear and warmer the crowds will increase, better games will be played and heavier batting will be the result. With dry grounds the ball always travels more actively than on a damp field, and the moisture of the atmosphere also has a peculiar effect on a batter's arm."

—::—::—

Many amusing incidents are told of by the players of the St. Louis Browns that turns the laugh on President Von der Ahe. If it were not for these incidents life with the "boss" would be unbearable. While he was in Chicago recently the following little episode occurred, and has caused much amusement among the players. It was publishd at the time in the Chicago News, but is told with more comic effect by some of the players. They say that for along time Von der Ahe kept urging Captain Stricker to try Genins, one of the club's reserve players. One day Stricker put Caruthers into the box and put Genins into right field in the pitcher's place.

The latter made a very creditable showing, considering the fact that it was his first game of the season. Nevertheless, he aroused Von der Ahe's displeasure. A home run drive flew high over his head, landing outside the grounds, and Genins did not go after it. Calling Stricker up in front of his private box, 'Der Boss' asked:

"Why don't Genins go after the ball? He stands there like a wooden man. Tell him to go and get it and field it in to the home plate. That's his play." Stricker replied:

"Why, it's no use. It's a home run anyway."

"That makes no difference. It don't look right for all our players to be standing around like dummies while these fellows are racing over the home plate."

Stricker only laughed at the nonsense of this proposition and flatly refused to obey his order.

But the joke came in the next morning. Stricker walked into Von der Ahe's office and the first words that greeted him were: "That Genins is no good. He is no use to us at all." Stricker had become used to hearing his superior rave, and has acquired a habit of involuntarily replying "Yes" or "No," as the case may require. Five minutes later, after Chris had glanced at the score in the morning paper, he spoke again, but this time was of an entirely different opinion. "I don't know, though. He made two base hits yesterday. He is a pretty fair player."

—::—::—

Said Curt Welch the other day: "I think McPhee is up for the greatest second baseman in the business. He has been in fast company for ten years, and where can you find another player that has made such a uniformly fine record? He is not brilliant by spells and spurts. He is brilliant all the time. He 'eats up' hard chances so easily and gracefully that you don't 'get onto' the real strength of his play. He is the king of second basemen. There is no mistake about it."

—::—::—

The members of the Chicago club have named Hutchinson "66 Hutch." Anson was asked why that name was given him and the old man explained he was so enthusiastic on the game of sixty-six that he hardly took time to eat. "Hutch" and Gumbert stay in every night and play the game until "Anse" is compelled to order them to go to bed.

—::—::—

The old veteran, Joe Quest, has been resurrected. After a long absence under cover that famous second baseman has bobbed up as the captain-manager of the Ishpemings in the new Wisconsin-Michigan league. There have been isolated cases of old men with wheels digging their own graves but the instances are few where a ball player has gone out into the brush and scared his own successor into camp. That is what Joe Quest did in the sweet long ago. He discovered Lou. Bierbauer, landed him in Philadelphia and a few weeks later he was beheaded and his shoes given to the gentleman who is now stopping grounders about second base for the Pittsburghers. Chicago is the "base of playing supplies" for the Wisconsin-Michigan organization, but half a dozen Porkopolitans drifted up there a year ago.

—::—::—

Frank G. Lenz, of the Manhattan Athletic club, of Brooklyn, has decided to undertake the difficult task of making a tour of the world on a bicycle. He will try to outdo Thomas Stevens, who circled the globe several years ago, and will start on his trip on the afternoon of June 14 from the City hall. He will ride a wheel specially adapted for rough usage. It is expected that two years will be required to make the journey. His route leads across the states to San Francisco, thence to Japan, China, India, Afghanistan, Asiatic Russia, Persia, Turkey, Servia, Bulgaria, Hungary, Austria, Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, France and the British isles. Lenz is 27 years old, five feet, six inches tall and well built. A number of local wheelmen will accompany him for a short distance from the start.

The fastest sprinter that ever struck the south won a 100-yard race at Van Buren, Ark., Saturday, in 9 3-4 seconds. He was entered as an unknown and defeated Travis, heretofore the champion sprinter of the south. After the race it was learned that the champion was Steve Farrell, of Boston, who is supposed to be the champion sprinter of America. Eight thousand dollars changed hands. This is the same Farrell who won the prize in the Sheffield (Eng.) handicap last year.

Woolf Bendoff, pugilist, who was recently in America, has been committed at the Liverpool assizes for attempted murder. While under the influence of liquor he attacked "Bill" Allerton, a sporting publican, with a butcher knife, frightfully cutting and maiming him. It is expected that he will receive ten years' penal servitude.

—::—::—

It is reported that Phil Dwyer has bought of J. W. Donothan, of San Francisco, for $15,000 the phenomenally good California colt Monowai II, by imported Midlothian-Eliza. He is a big chestnut and recently took up 120 pounds and won at Sacramento at five furlongs in 1:02. California horsemen consider him the best of his age in California.

—::—::—

At the London County and Athletic club grounds at Herne Hill Wednesday, Lewis Stroud, the bicyclist, beat by one-fifth of a second the world's record for half a mile of A. A. Zimmerman, the champion American bicyclist, of the New York Athletic club.

ON THE DIAMOND.

Katz's fielding and hitting are out of sight.

Dungan is hitting the ball as viciously as ever.

Dave Orr has opened up a hotel in Brooklyn.

Kelly is becoming very popular in Boston again.

George Miller is doing some fine catching for Pittsburg.

Darby, of the Omahogs, is pitching a good game this season.

President Day, of the New York Giants, draws a salary of $5,000 a year.

"Charley Comiskey's Bandits" is the title given the Reds in Quakerdom.

"The Hibernian Soprano" is the latest nickname for Fighting Tim Hurst.

The Louisvilles are negotiating for Reilly of the Phillies to play third base.

Joe Murphy in the Chicago Tribune calls Buck Ewing "the king of shirkers."

Trouble with the umpires is liable to cause the dissolution of the Southern league.

Dahlen, if he continues his present work on third base, will lead the league in that position.

Denny Lyons is booked for his release by New York if he does not brace up in his work.

Umpire Sheridan has a voice that draws rain. It sounds like the echo of a roar of thunder.

Big Bill Brown expects to wear an Oakland, Cal., club uniform the balance of the season.

Vian, the pitcher, has been signed for the Louisville team by Manager Chapman in Philadelphia.

Baltimore has dropped George Wood and Pittsburg will not touch him. "Woodie" is out in the cold.

Right Fielders Burns, of Brooklyn, and Seery, of Louisville, have played so far this season without an error.

Tom York, the old Baltimorean, is playing in the field for the Quincys! You can't keep the old timers out of it.

Eddie Seward, the old Athletic twirler, is playing first base for the Menominees in the Wisconsin-Michigan league.

Baltimore has released and Pittsburg has signed George Wood. McGraw, who has replaced Wood, is a light weight.

Down in Rochester the cranks have dubbed Dan Shannon's New Haven lads "the Puritans." Why, the deponent saith not.

Kittridge and Hutchinson will get the reputation of being the hardest hitting battery in the league if they keep up their stick work.

Jerry Harrington and Kid McGill have been ordered to shake the dust of Brooklyn from their feet. They are too tough for even the Queen city.

Charles Schuman, a baker, aged 21, died at Columbus from concussion of the brain, resulting from being hit with a base ball while playing "catch."

Mrs. Slattery, wife of Mike Slattery, the well-known outfielder, leaves soon for Europe to receive $30,000 which she has inherited by the death of an uncle.

Delahanty is said to have developed into such a pie fiend that he invariably insists upon eating his dessert while his soup is cooling.—Philadelphia Press.

Hardie Richardson has a Utica boy named Ben French in tow. The former says French is a fine pitcher, and would make his mark if he got a chance.

"Tip O'Neill is in bad health and will have to retire temporarily from the diamond. Once the best batter in the association, he can not hit the ball at all now.

The New York papers are calling on Buck Ewing to go behind the bat and relieve Boyle. Buck will stay where he is. He knows a good thing when he gets it.

Collins' death will prove a great loss to Brooklyn, but Ward has Darby O'Brien to take "Hub's" place. Burns, Griffin and O'Brien are a great trio of fielders and hitters.

Hanlon says McMahon reminds him much of the once famous pitcher, McCormick. "He has the same motions and is just about as good a pitcher," declares the Oriole manager.—Baltimore Sun.

Charley Comiskey, commenting upon Chris Von der Ahe's declaration that the Browns would finish as good as third, laconically observed, "If they do they'll have to release Chris."—Philadelphia Press.

Ye gods! Think of Joe Battin—the same old Joe who held his end up in such great shape with the Athletics away back in the 70's—playing third for the young blood Camden team! So exclaims Frank Hough.

Jack Rowe, one of the famous 'Big Four, has been signed to play second for Buffalo. Catcher Pat Dealey is another acquisition to the Bison's ranks. Denny Connors, the left fielder, will also make his debut as a Bison.

Has any one heard yet whether Elmer Foster has succeeded in breaking into the Minneapolis legislature? The universal opinion is that "Spokane" has just wheels enough to make a first-class lawmaker, declares Sandy Griswold.

Both Rhines and Harrington will ask to be reinstated into the Cincinnati club, and if they prove their worthiness by proper conduct perhaps such action will be taken by the time the second division fight commences.

Elmer Smith says: "I know I am a rather poor fielder, but I think I can hit that ball." Elmer is trying to improve his fielding. Dungan was a miserable outfielder until this year. Hard practice and a few hints from Anson have brought about a big change.

The report that Pitcher Clarkson is to be released by the Boston club is authoritatively denied, but it is understood that he is to chiefly figure on the bench and at the turnstile during the remainder of the season. A good offer for Stovey would doubtless secure his release.

—::—::—

ABOUT THE STABLES.

Hal Pointer will not start until he meets Direct at Buffalo the first week in August.

D. Aikins, Alliance, O., says he will start up his brown horse by Pretender out of the dam of Old Crow.

W. Whitridge, Baltimore, Md., has lost by death the old brood mare Dolly, dam of Mambrino Hannis, 2:16 1-2.

W. E. Lowe, Napoleon, O., has purchased Nita Wilson, by Blue Bull, out of Pet Hammond by Alexander's Abdallah.

Roy Wilkes, 2:08 1-4, Manager, 2:11 1-2, and Guy, 2:11 3-4, will meet in the free-for-all pacing race at Des Moines in August.

George Tufts, the young man that was expelled at Rochester in 1888 for pulling Loretta F., will be on the turf again this year.

Two Bridgeport, Conn., horsemen have a wager of $1,000 a side relative to the ability of a horse to trot 36 miles in three hours.

J. W. Pritz, Dayton, O., has refused an offer of $7,000 for his 3-year-old colt Borneo by Sphinx, out of Judea, the dam of Lottie W. and Number Ten.

There is a filly Brenner, out of Lucy, by Pilot Patchen in H. D. Rosentell's stable at Montgomery City, Mo., that is expected to beat 2:30 this year.

Report says that Sunol will trot against time at Grand Rapids on August 10 and that Nancy Hawks, 2:09, will trot against Sunol's time on the following day, resulting in a match race between the pair.

IN GENERAL.

The chances are very slim for a meeting between Ted Pritchard and Bob Fitzsimmons.

Joe Goddard, the Australian who is to fight Joe McAuliffe, is extremely confident of winning.

Dempsey and Daly have been matched for a fight to a finish to take place at Omaha June 17.

Charley Dunn, another Australian heavy-weight, is coming to this country in search of the good American dollars.

Tom O'Rourke, George Dixon's manager, offers to back an unknown against Jimmy Kennard for stakes of $1,000 a side.

Reddy Brennan and Owen Marley have signed an agreement for a finish fight on June 11, within 50 miles of Dubuque for $250 and gate receipts.

Joe Goddard and Joe McAuliffe have signed articles for their fight in the California Athletic club. The fight will occur on the night of June 30.

Billy Gibbs, the Kansas demon, knocked out Eddie Connors, of New York, in 13 rounds at the Columbus Athletic club. Frankie McHugh officiated as referee.

The match between Johnson and Dixon has been arranged for a $5,000 purse. The winner is to receive $4,500 and the loser $500. Dixon has gone into training of Jim O'Rourke.

Jim Corbett left 'Frisco this week for a trip through southern California to Colorado. From there he comes direct to New York and will go into training immediately at Asbury Park for his fight with Sullivan.

A Burlington, Ia., dispatch says: Harry McCoy, the champion welter-weight of America, and "Jack" Davis, of Portland, Ore., have signed articles for a finish fight to take place the latter part of this month. The purse will be $500. A $250 forfeit has been posted by both sides.

Billy and Johnny Murphy have gone into training for their battle at the Pacific club, which should be one of the important fistic events of the year. Johnny says that it will be certain defeat to him if Billy can "copper" him with his right, but then the trick is not always successful.

PREPARING FOR SUMMER BUSINESS.

A Fifth Avenue woman entered the office of a Bowery loan office agency the other day and said: "I want to raise $1,500 on $3,000 worth of furniture. What is your lowest rate of interest?"

"On such loans we generally ask 10 per cent."

"Very well. Send your examiner up to the house. It is a speculation with me."

"Going into business, ma'am?"

"Yes, sir. I'm going to take my three daughters to the sea shore this season, and either marry 'em off or drown 'em."
—Texas Siftings.

IN THAT OLD MEETING-HOUSE.

'Twas in an old-time "meeting-house"—
We used to go and "take our dinner"
And stay all day, "the folks" and I—
That first I felt myself a sinner:
'Twas in that old-time "meeting-house,"
So barn-like, big and bare of beauty,
That first I found a pleasure sweet
In what had been but dismal duty.

Tho' there no dim religious light,
No organ's grand and lofty pealing,
Did move the sinful soul of man
Each Sabbath to a softer feeling—
Tho' as a boy, I grieve to say,
It sometimes took a good sound beating
To get me there—from that day on
I dearly loved to go to "meeting."

And I who'd reckoned Sabbath day,
Of all the week, as just the worst time,
Now gladly hailed its coming round,
And really worshiped for the first time;
Tho' when the parson preached, I own
I rarely heard what he was saying,
Devotion waxed so strong with me
I felt that e'en my eyes were praying.

And yet, the more devout I grew,
The more I saw my sin grew greater,
Since, of idolaters, full oft
Right there I'd heard that heaven's a hater;
And I'd set up within my heart
To worship—sure, I was a goner—
The image of a pretty girl
Who sat up in the "amen corner!"

How the Reading club does grow. Just see the list of members who have sent in their pledges during the past two weeks. This club is sure to be a great thing for the young people who join. The first story is printed this week and of course everybody can read it, but the Bee would like to have all of the young people send their names in and promise to read all the stories. Those who do so will then have a chance at the fine prizes that are to be offered for the Reading club members. The pledge will be printed every week and you can join at any time.

Many new names were received this week and the full list of members follows:

THE LINNET SINGS.

By note and word
My sense is stirred,
For never clearer song was heard
Than that the linnet sings.
Lying near it,
Full I hear it,
From the brier where it swings:
"He kist her—kist her—kist her—
Sweet—my sweet—
Sweet sister."

If grief or glee
Impels this free
Outpouring of its soul to me,
My voice will not betray.
I silent lie
The brier by,
And hear it sing and say:
"He kist her—kist her—kist her—
Sweet—my sweet—
Sweet sister."

Think as you will,
Or well or ill,
Of what it sings in swinging still
Upon the brier there:
It may be glad,
It may be sad,
But, oh! the sweetest air—
"He kist her—kist her—kist her—
Sweet—my sweet—
Sweet sister."

To me or you
It says not who
This right or wrongful act did do—
I wonder if it could.
I only hear
Its notes so clear
Go ringing through the wood:
"He kist her—kist her—kist her—
Sweet—my sweet—
Sweet sister."

CATCHING A PANTHER.

Zed and I were brothers, he being two years the older, when our family moved from Ohio to Michigan many years ago and settled down in the woods three miles from the nearest cabin. We were too young to be of much assistance, Zed being eleven and I nine years old, but I remember that we piled brush and kept the great log fires burning on the land which father was clearing up.

Bears and wolves were numerous in those pioneer days, and now and then at night we heard a panther scream. Any one who ever heard this sound will agree with me that even the oldest hunter might have an excuse for being startled. It does sound something like the cry of a human being in distress, as has often been asserted, but it does not have to be repeated to make one realize that danger is at hand.

Our cabin was made of logs, of course, and was only one story high. Next to it, on the west side, father built a shed in which the oxen were stabled at night. Our pigs and poultry were also secured there. This shed had an almost flat roof. During the first fall of our pioneer life bears and wolves appeared almost nightly, and father shot several from one of the windows of the cabin. We had heard panthers scream in the tamarack swamp half a mile to the east on several occasions, and Zed and I had snuggled closer to one another under the bed clothes, but so far as known none had ever come about the cabin or shed.

One day about the middle of November a hunter and trapper, who had some pelts to sell, left a lot of traps with us while he went to the nearest town, which was 25 miles away. The traps were put on the roof of the stable, and he was hardly out of sight before Zed and I were up there overhauling them. There was one big bear trap, two smaller ones for wolves and foxes, and eight or ten muskrat traps.

We had never seen an animal trap of any sort before, but we soon discovered how they worked, and we did not stop until they were all set and scattered about on the roof.

We did not know anything about baiting them, and our only idea was to catch some of the squirrels which frequently played about the stable. That night it snowed and about three inches fell. During the day another inch or two was added, and Zed and I went to bed at night knowing that the traps were covered up out of sight, and flattering ourselves that some squirrel might leap off a limb onto the roof and become a prisoner.

About midnight the whole family was aroused by the scream of a panther who seemed to be at the front door. It raised Zed and I right out of bed, and father tumbled out a few seconds behind us and struck a light. The panther screamed again and again and mother began to cry and father to look as white as the snow outside. While there was no real cause to fear the beast outside so long as we remained indoors, he had come upon us so suddenly that even father, who had often laughed at panther stories, was unnerved for the moment.

Almost as soon as the candle was alight the beast was on the roof of the house. I don't know that he would have descended the stick-and-mud chimney if there had been no fire on the hearth, but for fear that he might do so father threw on some light wood and made a smoke and a blaze.

Notwithstanding the carpet of snow on the roof we could hear the panther moving about, and he cried out two or three times more in a way to make us shiver. Father got down his rifle and was for opening the door or a window in hopes to get a shot which would at least frighten the beast away, but mother begged so hard and Zed and I were so undone that he did not. There was no chamber, as I have said, and the rude shingles on the roof were not over 10 feet above our heads. As the panther stopped for a moment and dug away the snow father fired up through the shingles, hoping to at least frighten him. As was afterwards proved, the bullet inflicted quite a severe wound. As the gun was discharged there was a terrible yell, and the next instant the beast made a spring.

He probably intended to leap to the ground, but was too confused to know the direction he took. At any rate he landed on the stable, and set up such a yelling and screaming and growling as had never been heard in that forest before. The oxen, pigs and chickens added their share to the frightful pandemonium, and Zed and I explained about the traps. All had chains, but we had not secured any of them. It was plain from the noise that the panther had put his foot into one of them. Everything became quiet then, and we all went to bed.

Morning made all plain. Never had a panther met with worse luck. As he struck the roof the bear trap caught one of his forefeet, and in lashing around a fox trap caught a hindfoot, and he went off loaded down with iron. He could be easily followed, of course, but to our great amazement he had traveled to the edge of the swamp before the chains caught and brought him to a standstill. He was furious at sight of father, and we plainly heard his screams and roars at the house. A bullet through the head settled him, and Zed and I dragged him home over the snow.

Some hunters who came along that day pronounced him the largest panther ever killed in that part of the state, and the money which they paid father for the skin bought Zed and myself each a new pair of boots and cloth for a suit of clothes.—New York World.

A FORSAKEN FAVORITE.

This world has many types of loneliness:
The last leaf fluttering in November's gale;
A widowed bird, that sits and calls in vain;
The empty chair of one we used to love;
A lighthouse beacon on a stormy night;
A vacant bird-cage, whence the song has died;
An autumn rose upon its frosty brier;
A sea-gull floating in the wintry sky;
A sweetheart waiting for a recreant love;
A late star twinkling faintly into day;
A ship alone upon the trackless sea;
A butterfly belated in a frost;
A baby's grave upon a Western trail;
A ruined homestead shone on by the moon.

Yet none seems drearier than the household pet,
Once welcomed to the warmest fireside place,
A purring, proud, luxurious favorite,
Which haunts, at evening of a wintry day,
The door step of a house untenanted,
From which her false, forgetful friends have gone,
Leaving her homeless, hungry, and forlorn.
Vainly she waits the care she used to know,
The children's call, the evening's milky feast,
The gentle hand that smoothed her furry sides;
Raises alternately her patient feet,
Benumbed and aching from the icy stone,
Watches the shuttered windows piteously,
And mews despairing at the bolted door.
—Elizabeth A. Kers, in Our Dumb Animals.

RULES OF BEE READING CLUB.

This club is for all young people who read the Bee, both boys and girls. Its object is to furnish a carefully selected course of reading that will not only interest and amuse, but will also instruct and do good.

These stories will be published in series of three months each, the first one being on Christopher Columbus and the early settlement of America.

At the end of each three months each one who takes the course will write a letter to the Bee telling what they have learned in the stories they have read. There will be handsome prizes for the members who write the best reviews.

In order to write a good review members should save the papers containing the Reading club stories.

At the end of one year printed diplomas will be issued to all who have followed the course.

To become a member cut out the following pledge promising that you will read all the stories and send it to the Reading Club Editor, Toledo Bee, Toledo, Ohio.

You will then be enrolled in the list of membership and the names of members will be printed in the Bee. You can join the club at any time. Send your name in now and get some of your friends to join also.

LITTLE PEACHLING.

A long time ago there lived an old man and an old woman. One day the old man went to the mountains to cut grass and the old woman went to the river to wash clothes. When she was washing a great big thing came tumbling down the stream. When the old woman saw it she was very glad and pulled it to her with a piece of bamboo that lay near by. When she took it up and looked at it she saw that it was a very large peach. She then quickly finished her washing and returned home, intending to give the peach to her old man to eat.

When she cut the peach in two out came a child from the large kernel. Seeing this, the old couple rejoiced and named the child Momotaro, or Little Peachling, because he came out of a peach. As both the old people took good care of him he grew and became strong and enterprising.

Momotaro, finding that he excelled everybody in strength, determined to cross over to the island of the devils, take their riches and come back. He at once consulted with the old man and the old woman about the matter and got them to make him some dumplings. These he put in his pouch. Besides this he made every kind of preparation for his journey to the island of the devils and set out.

Then first a dog came to the side of the way and said: "Momotaro! What have you there hanging at your belt?" He replied: "I have some of the very best Japanese millet dumplings." "Give me one and I will go with you," said the dog. So Momotaro took a dumpling out of his pouch and gave it to the dog. Then a monkey came and got one the same way. A pheasant also came flying and said: "Give me a dumpling, too, and I will go along with you." So all three went along with him. In no time they arrived at the island of the devils and at once broke through the front gate, Momotaro finding then his three followers. Here they met a great multitude of the devil's retainers, who showed fight, but they pressed still inward, and at last encountered the chief of the devils, called Akandoji. Then came the tug of war. Akandoji made at Momotaro with an iron club, but Momotaro was ready for him and dodged him adroitly. At last they grappled each other, and without difficulty Momotaro just crushed down Akandoji and tied him with a rope so tight that he could not even move. All this was done in a fair fight.

After this Akanjodi, the chief of the devils, said he would surrender all his riches. "Out with your riches, then," said Momotaro, laughing. Having collected and ranged in order a great pile of precious things, Momotaro took them and set out for his home, rejoicing, as he marched bravely back, that with the help of his three companions, to whom he attributed all his success, that he had been able so easily to accomplish his end.

Great was the joy of the old man and the old woman when Momotaro came back. He feasted everybody bountifully, told many stories of his adventure, displayed his riches, and at last became a leading man, a man of influence, very rich and honorable; a man to be very much congratulated, indeed.—Chicago News.

A LAKE WITH A ROOF.

No, it isn't frozen salt, and it isn't underground. On the contrary, this remarkable lake may be seen at any time during the year, fully exposed, being even at its best when the sun is shining directly upon it. This wonderful body of water is one of the saltest of the salt lakes, and is situated near Obdorsk, Siberia. The lake is 9 miles wide and 17 long, and within the memory of man was entirely roofed over by the salt deposit. Originally evaporation played the most prominent part in coating the lake over with salt, but at the present time the salt springs which surround it are adding fast to the thickness of the crust.

In the long ago rapid evaporation of the lake's water left great salt crystals floating on the surface. In the course of time these caked together. Thus the waters were finally entirely covered. In 1878 the lake found an underground outlet into the river Obi, which lowered its surface about three feet. The salt crust was so thick, however, that it retained its old level, and now presents the curious spectacle of a salt-roofed lake. The salt coat increases six inches in thickness every year. The many islands with which the lake is studded are said to act as braces and to help keep the arched salt crust in position.—St. Louis Republic.

AMERICA'S DISCOVERER.

Boyish Days and Early Manhood of Christopher Columbus.

Reading Club Story No. 1.

Just four hundred and fifty-six years ago, a baby boy was born in the city of Genoa. His father was not a nobleman, but an honest, upright and hard-working man; a wool-carder by trade. He was proud of his little family, three boys and one girl, and he helped them to form their characters after his own—that is, he made good men of his boys and a true woman of his daughter.

The baby boy who came into this happy family in 1436 is the one that we are always glad to learn about. His name was Christopher Columbus.

The city of Genoa faces upon the blue sea, and over it is spread the blue Italian sky. Little Christopher loved to watch both sea and sky and dream about their secrets. While he loved to play with his brothers and sister, yet he liked better to sit for hours and study the sky, or to gaze and gaze at the ships sailing upon the ocean, to and from his native port.

He could not help thinking how wonderfully the world was made, and these thoughts taught him to know how good and how kind God had been to man to give him so many blessings.

As soon as he was old enough his father sent him to school at Paris, where he studied very hard. He worked so well and learned so very fast that he was through school and ready for business when he was but fourteen years of age.

His great love for the blue sea led him to try the life of a sailor and for several years he lived upon the ocean. So you see he was a thorough navigator. He had not only studied his art in school but he had put it into real practice. But he felt that the narrow seas that were then known were too small for him. He wanted to get beyond them, to find what was yet unknown.

At this time there were many strange ideas about the shape of the earth, held by the people in general. Some of the more learned men had begun to believe that the earth was round, but none of them had any idea that it was as large as it is. But almost every one else thought that the earth was flat and that if one sailed far enough over the ocean they would fall off the edge into bottomless space. Others, again, believed that the earth was round but that if one should sail down the round side they could not get back again, because it would be like sailing up hill.

While at school, Columbus had learned to draw fine maps and make correct charts of the seas. During his life as a sailor he had kept on doing this and had managed to earn quite a fair livelihood from it. His charts always sold well because they were so very accurate.

He was one of the few who felt sure that the earth was round and he was convinced more than ever that this must be true, as he went on making his maps and globes. One day, while working away on a large globe, dotting it over with the continents and islands that he knew to be in existence, his attention was drawn to the immense, empty space in the middle of the Atlantic ocean. Of course we now know that that is where our own America lies, but yet Columbus discovered it for us. But he had no idea then, nor ever did have, that another large continent was there awaiting the daring explorer. He believed that if he could sail to the west he would some time arrive at the shores of the East Indies, the countries where gold and precious stones, silks and spices could be had in great ship loads.

Columbus was wise, a genius and well educated, but he was poor. It was impossible for him to carry out his great hope without aid from some one in power.

As he was born in Genoa, and Genoa is in Italy, he felt that he ought to ask help from the Italian government first. He did so but they would do nothing at all for him. They did not believe in his plans, and, besides, they were too busy with expeditions nearer home. This was his first disappointment, but he lost none of his bright hopefulness or his firm faith in the western passage to India and the Orient.

On one of his early voyages Columbus' vessel caught fire and he was shipwrecked. He managed to get to land by jumping into the water, supporting himself with an oar in one hand and swimming with the other. He was now in Portugal, where he remained for many years. He set up a small business here, earning his living by making his charts and globes. He was fond of his home in Lisbon, because here he met so many mariners who told him the stories of their adventures in the seas. Some of them had seen, floating in the water, branches of unknown trees, pieces of wood carved, but not with steel tools like their own, huge pines hollowed into canoes, large enough to carry eight persons, gigantic reeds and even corpses of copper-colored men, who did not look at all like any of the natives of Europe, Asia or Africa. Of course we know that they were the bodies of Indians, but those old sailors of four hundred years ago would never have believed you if you had told them that there was a great continent, to the west of them, peopled with thousands of those copper-colored men.

But Columbus thought deeply about all these things, and was more than ever convinced that by sailing far to the west he would land on an unknown coast of the East Indias. He never imagined that he should one day land on the "unknown coast" of a great continent, and he never learned that the new country that he had found was a new world. He died believing that he had succeeded in discovering the "western passage to the Indias."

As he went each day to attend religious services at the convent, he was attracted to a beautiful young girl, who always worshipped at the same time. She was the daughter of an Italian nobleman, who was in the service of the king of Portugal. Her name was Fillippa di Palestrello. She, on her part, was attracted to the thoughtful and majestic young stranger, who always attended her church, and before long they were married. They lived together very happily for several years, when Fillippa died, leaving her husband desolate, with a little son to care for. This boy he had named Diego, after one of his kind brothers.

One spring day, at noon, beneath a burning hot sun, two strangers, traveling on foot, their shoes almost worn out with walking, their dress soiled with dust and their foreheads streaming with perspiration, stopped to rest beneath the shade of the porch of a convent.

One was a man who had not yet reached the prime of life. He was tall, powerfully built and handsome of face. The other traveler was a child almost 10 years old. They were Christopher Columbus and his son, Diego. They were on their way to the Spanish court, where the father hoped to get help to carry on his explorations.

Their appearance and fatigue attracted the attention of the monks, who were most kind to them. The prior took charge of them and became much interested in the ambitious navigator.

Columbus had intended to take his boy Deigo to his uncle in the little town of Huerta, while he himself would go to the Court. The kind old prior, however, persuaded him to leave Diego at the monastery with them, and promised to aid him in getting help from the king and queen.

After resting for a few days at the convent, Columbus set out for Cordora, where the court then resided. He went full of gratitude for his new-found friend, whose generosity had encouraged him, and whose eyes and heart never quitted him, and confident of success. In our next story we shall learn what success came to him.

BEE HIVE.

Greeting.

Dear Young Readers—I want to tell you all how delighted I am with your prompt answers and pledges for the Reading Club. We will have a nice large club I hope. Our first story appears to-day, and let everyone be careful to read it and think about what you are reading.

I have received some nice letters this week and am glad to print them. I have also received a large number of new puzzles. Our puzzle contest will soon be over, so hurry your lists along. June 15th is the time set for the decision.

Hoping to hear from you all, each and everyone, I remain

Your friend,
PETER BUZZER.

A Bright Scholar.

Dear Mr. Buzzer—I am a little girl nine years old.

I live at Trombley, Wood county, Ohio. My mamma is dead and I live with my Aunt Maggie Pelton.

She has taken the Bee ever since it has been published.

I go to school every day at Flint. I am at the head of my classes in all of my studies.

Yours truly,

Trombley, O.

Two Chums.

Dear Sir—I would like to write a few lines to be printed in the Bee.

I am 13 years old.

My pa has taken the Bee for four years, and I used to sell it. When I stopped, your paper gave me a very nice picture, and I thank you very much.

My chum, Francis Palmer, sells the Bee now and I get one every night.

Francis and I sit together in school. We are trying to be good but we think our teacher is cross.

I go to Sunday school and church every Sunday.

It is nearly school time now and I will have to stop for this time. I will write more next time.

Please print this in the Bee.

Yours truly,
MARTIN SPANGLER.
Malinta, O.

A nice letter, Martin, and we are glad to hear from you, but please write upon but one side of the paper next time. P. B.

His First Letter.

Dear Mr. Buzzer—I thought I would write you a letter, and if it escapes the waste basket I will write again. I am a little boy 11 years old, and my brother, Lawson, is 10. Our school closed yesterday. We loved our teacher dearly. This is my first letter.

Tone, Touch, Workmanship and Durability!

LETTERS FROM THE WORLD'S GREATEST PIANISTS.

VON BULOW'S LETTER

After Concert Tour, 1890.

To William Knabe, Esq., Baltimore.

Dear Sir:—My renewed and by more use—under aggravating circumstances, as bad health and tiresome traveling—enlarged experience of your Pianos this (second and last transatlantic) season has throughout confirmed myself in the opinion I expressed last year, viz: That sound and touch of the Knabe Pianos are more sympathetic to my ears and hands than sound and touch of any other Pianos in the United States. As I met with frequent opportunities of establishing comparisons between the Knabe Pianos and Instruments of rivalizing or would-rivalizing producers, I dare now add that I declare them the absolutely best in America.

With sincere regards, Yours truly,
DR. HANS VON BULOW.
Hamburg, 27th May, 1890.

—TO—

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.

Translated from the German.

During my sojourn here I had frequent opportunities to make myself acquainted with the Knabe Pianos, and from fullest conviction I declare them to be the best Instruments of America. Should I return here for artistic purposes—which may be the case very soon—I shall most certainly use the Pianos of this celebrated make. I give this testimonial with pleasure, voluntarily, and entirely unsolicited for by the house of Knabe.

EUGEN D'ALBERT.
New York, May 16, 1890.

A LARGE and well selected stock of GRANDS PIANOS all sizes, fancy mahogany and English oak cases. Also a full line of Uprights in various fancy woods, just received direct from the factory, and now on view at our warerooms.

Prices and terms more reasonable than can be had on this grade of Pianos elsewhere. We purchase all our goods of the manufacturers for cash, and can save buyers a sub-agent's commission. We invite the public to come and inspect famous Pianos whether wishing to buy or not.

MY OLD RAG DOLL.

Last night I searched the garret for a long-forgotten book,
And as I pried and peered about, down in a dusty nook
I found what made me all at once forget what I was after,
And filled my eyes with springing tears and stirred my voice to laughter.
And up I took it wonderingly, with cobwebs, dust and all,
And held it close against my heart—
My old rag doll.

Oh, dear forgotten childhood's joy! Oh! precious long-lost treasure!
I cannot tell why such a pain was mingled with the pleasure;
I cannot tell just why the tears fell fast from eyes bent over
That dusty, dear, old-fashioned thing—I only know I love her!
I only know that "Polly" in her little ragged shawl
Is mine once more—is mine again—
My old rag doll.

Dear relic of my childhood—of that happy, happy time
When life meant play and sunshine and every joy was mine;
When care was all unknown to me, and every bright to-morrow
Was but an echo of to-day! There rarely came a sorrow,
But when my fair horizon was stirred by sudden squall
There was naught that gave me comfort like
My old rag doll.

The old, familiar, dirty face, with features done in ink,
And the little faded ribbon tied with many a childish prink,
And the dusty plaid merino of the little time-worn gown,
And the tiny knitted stockings o'er the shoe-tops slipping down—
There on the garret floor I sat and brooded o'er them all
And longed for that sweet childhood with
My old rag doll.

And though I am a woman, with a woman's work and care,
And though I look each morning for the silver in my hair,
And my golden childhood is but a happy dream
Somehow to-day its perfect joys a little nearer seem
Since I found her in the garret with the cobwebs, dust and all,
That dearest relic of the past—
My old rag doll.

Farm AND Garden

SUMMER WASHES

For Fruit Tree Twigs and Berry Bushes.

The Hatch experiment station of the Massachusetts Agricultural college has lately issued a valuable bulletin relating to the use of fungicides and insecticides. The directions of the bulletin are summarized as follows:

For the Apple.

Spray for the destruction of the spores of the apple scab and leaf blight with pound to 25 gallons of water, or sulphate sulphate of copper (blue vitriol), one of iron (copperas), one pound to two gallons. For the destruction of the tent caterpillar, canker worm and bud moth use the bordeaux mixture, one-half strength, with paris green, one pound to 150 gallons, just before the blossoms unfold, and for the same and the codling moth, as soon as the petals have fallen. Make a third application of the bordeaux mixture and paris green in about two weeks from the time the petals fall, should there have been heavy rains since the last application; then use the ammoniacal carbonate of copper, one pound to 50 gallons of water, at intervals of from two to four weeks, according to the weather, until the middle of August.

For the Pear.

For the pear scab, leaf blight and cracking of the fruit, and codling moth, the same treatment should be given as for the apple, except that no paris green need be used until after the petals have fallen, and only two applications of that need be made. If the pear tree psylla should appear spray the trees thoroughly with the kerosene emulsion, one part to 20 parts of water.

For the Plum.

We would advise the same treatment as given to the apple and pear for the plum leaf blight, black wart and fruit rot. For the plum curculio use the bordeaux mixture, one-half strength, with paris green, one pound to 200 gallons. One application of the ammoniacal carbonate of copper should be made after the middle of August, to prevent the rotting of the fruit and the leaf blight.

For the Peach.

To destroy the plum curculio, spray with the bordeaux mixture, one-fourth strength, and paris green, one pound to 200 gallons. For the fruit rot, spray with the ammoniacal carbonate of copper, one pound to 50 gallons of water. Try the sulphate of copper, one pound to 1,000 gallons of water, for the fruit rot.

For the Grape.

Spray with the concentrated solution of sulphate of copper every part of the vines and trellis before the buds unfold. Just before the blossom buds unfold, spray with the bordeaux mixture, one-half strength, with paris green, one pound to 100 gallons. As soon as the petals have fallen spray again with the same. Then at intervals of about two weeks use the ammoniacal carbonate of copper, one pound to 25 gallons. Try the sulphate of copper, one pound to 500 and 800 gallons of water, at the same intervals.

Raspberry and Blackberry.

For the anthracnose of the blackcaps and the yellow rust of the blackberry, use the concentrated solution of sulphate of copper, before the buds open. Then spray with the bordeaux mixture, one-half strength, or the ammonical carbonate of copper, before the blossom buds unfold, and two or three times after the fruit has been gathered, at intervals of two or three weeks. The first disease attacks the canes principally, and more attention in spraying should be given to them than to the leaves.

The Strawberry.

Spray with the bordeaux mixture, one-half strength, and paris green, one pound to 100 gallons for the leaf blight and the "spotted parla," as soon as growth begins in the spring. Just before the blossoms open use the bordeaux mixture, same strength, but no paris green. After the fruit has been gathered paris green and the bordeaux mixture should be used if the bed or field is to be carried through another season.

The Potato.

As soon as the larvae of the potato beetle begin to appear, spray with the bordeaux mixture, one-half strength, and paris green, one pound to 100 gallons. Use the same mixture as often as they appear in sufficient numbers to be injurious. If the weather should be warm and moist, applications should be made at intervals of from one to three weeks after the vines have blossomed, of the bordeaux mixture, one-half strength, or the ammonical carbonate of copper, one pound to 50 gallons of water, even if there are no larvae present. The sulphate of copper, one pound to 500 gallons, should also be tried on a small scale to test its value.

Formulas for Mixtures.

The fungicides used were bordeaux mixture: Formula, six pounds of sulphate of copper (blue vitriol) dissolved in about three gallons of water and four pounds of caustic lime slaked in water enough to make a thin lime wash. When cool, the two substances were thoroughly mixed and diluted with water to 25 and 50 gallons of liquid.

Ammoniacal carbonate of copper: Formula, six ounces of carbonate of ammonia and one ounce of carbonate of copper; one pound of this mixture being dissolved in 25 and 50 gallons of water.

Sulphate of copper (blue vitriol), one pound dissolved in 25 gallons of water.

Sulphate of iron (copperas), one pound to two gallons of water.

The only insecticide used was paris green, this being found less injurious to the foliage than any other arsenite.

Irish Potatoes.

There are few things among all that we plant which are of more general interest than the humble potato, and among all our farm crops there is almost none that varies more widely than the amount of profit which it returns to the grower. Among our most successful farmers are many who make the potato crop a main dependence, and one of the best and surest sources of their income; and, on the other hand, there is no farmer so poor and shiftless that he does not have at least a small patch of the tubers to keep the wolf from his door. The yield of potatoes, as with everything else that grows from the ground, is exceedingly variable, and runs from nothing up to 1,000 bushels per acre. The profitable medium is found somewhere between this limit. Yields of 500 bushels an acre are not extremely rare, and 200 and 300 is an average that many farmers find it comparatively easy to attain. When we consider that the average crop is about 80 bushels, and that this presumably pays some profit (or else people would generally abandon their cultivation), it is easy to believe that a crop three times as large as the average must pay well, indeed. If this is so, then every man who plants potatoes this year—and this means every one who has a farm or garden—will have in mind the possibilities and bend every energy to the work of obtaining a result far beyond the average. With good soil to start with this is not a difficult matter. To be sure, there are droughts, bugs, blight and other enemies to contend with, and which will sometimes render our efforts of little avail, no matter how well we work, but with good soil to start with, and then adding to this good seed, good planting and good cultivation, the chances are largely in favor of our getting a paying crop. With these conditions existing, we need not so much fear the effect or drawbacks mentioned, for it is a well known fact that a well cultivated crop resists such attacks better than a neglected one. Our space here will hardly permit going into all the details regarding planting and crop management, but we wish to give one or two suggestions. In selecting seed potatoes, do not use any that have sprouted. The first sprout from the eye is always the strongest, and if that is destroyed, as it is almost sure to be in planting, so much of the virility of the seed piece is lost, and this is a loss that cannot be compensated for by any amount of fertilizing or after cultivation. The best results in potato growing are only to be had in procuring many large potatoes and few small ones. This can be done by cutting the seed pieces to only one or two eyes, thus having few plants to the hill. If there are more eyes there will be many sprouts, and more tubers will form than the food plant available in the one hill can well sustain. Some successful growers even go so far as to remove all but two plants from each hill. By observing the foregoing you can plant your hills quite close together, and so obtain the maximum result from the least amount of ground, thus saving in the labor of cultivation. Drills 30 inches apart and hills one foot apart in the drills is not too close if you use one or two-eyed seed pieces. This will give you about 43,000 hills to the acre, and if you then get a yield of a half pound a hill you will have a very good crop, indeed. Level cultivation will do much to prevent damage from drought. In planting open the furrows so that you can drop the seed at least six inches below the level surface and cover with two inches of fine earth. Then fill in gradually at each cultivation until, when you lay them by, they are only very slightly ridged up.

The Cost of the Eggs.

That some breeds will lay more than others does not indicate the actual cost or expense. The point is to feed all the food that can be converted into eggs. It is not the cost that should be considered, but the number of eggs in proportion to cost. One can better afford to feed ten bushels of feed to hens that lay regularly, than to feed one bushel to hens that do not lay.

Just how much profit a hen gives depends upon the prices obtained, but it is easy to discover which is the most profitable hen when we base the estimate upon what she daily produces, for no matter what the market value of an egg may be, it contains the same amount of nutrition and calls for the same service from the hen.

If a large hen and a small hen eat the same amount of food, and are of the same age, the large hen has been the more profitable for the reason that, in addition to laying eggs equal in number to the other, she has also produced more meat in her carcass when she is killed and dressed. But the service of the hen cannot be estimated by the number of eggs she lays.

A hen may lay a greater weight of eggs than another, and yet not come up in number to her rivals, and therefore, though not giving as large a profit (as eggs are sold by the dozen, instead of by weight) she is really more valuable than the profitable hen, so far as true merit is concerned. We cannot estimate how much food is required for a hen for that reason, as some hens lay more eggs than others, some lay heavier eggs, and some no not lay at all, yet food is required for them.

It is doubtful if any person can arrive at a knowledge of the actual average cost of an egg, but it is an easy matter to learn if the production of eggs is equivalent to the value of the food given. Something must be allowed, however, for the saving of the waste material used by the hens, as it really possesses no marketable value, but which is picked up by the hens and converted into eggs. The value of the manure is always an item of profit.

The cost of the maintenance of the roosters is of course to be classed somewhere, for while the males produce nothing except their bodies, yet they are necessities that must also be paid for in some shape. It is an interesting problem and worth a few thoughts, as the value of the eggs and their cost enters largely into the poultry account.—Farmers' Magazine.

Field Peas for Hogs.

Mr. Clark Johnson, a prominent Tennessee farmer, writes that he will this year put 75 acres to field peas for his hogs, though he would not have it understood that he will devote 75 acres to peas exclusively. There is no need of that. He plants the peas in his corn, or rather sows them. At time of the last plowing he sows peas broadcast before the plows and the plows cover them, or at least most of them—always enough to secure a good stand. By the time the peas are vining freely the corn is finished, and hence no harm is done to the corn crop. If he was a fodder puller the pea vines would be seriously in the way, but he is not, and don't think any other farmer ought to be, as the fodder seldom pays for the trouble and expense of the gathering. It is certainly not worth anything like so much as the peas.

Mr. Johnson grows the black pea exclusively for two reasons: It is more hardy and robust than either of the other varieties, and birds will not trouble it at all. The last he considers of special importance, as quail and other birds will flock to a pea field and devour many peas of the light colored kinds when they begin popping from the pods. His peas are grown for hog feed, and he considers that they do growing hogs entirely more good than corn. They make for hogs both a pasture and grain feed, while, at the same time, they take the peas as appetite demands.

So soon as his corn is gathered Mr. Johnson turns in his hogs, and every indication appears to tell that the animals consider themselves in a regular "hog heaven" from thence so long as the pea vines and peas last. He considers peas raised on this plan the most profitable crop he can raise for the outlay—they about pay in full for the corn crop. Then this is not all: While they do not hurt the corn crop, as already intimated, their roots enrich the soil, leaving it in much better condition than would have characterized it without them. Besides, he considers the peas of special advantage to the corn in its fruiting season, as they act as a mulch and contribute much toward keeping the soil moist in time of drought by the dew that collects on and falls from the leaves.

The Crossing of Breeds.

Crossing two breeds having no characteristics in common is one of the greatest mistakes a poultryman can make; no fact is more thoroughly settled than that breeds must be kept pure to be made profitable. Pure-bred fowls always sell more readily and bring better prices than mixed. This is because they run more even, are all of one color and look better every way. I have known buyers to pay two cents a pound more for a lot of pure-bred chickens than for common mixed lots. A man who made a business of driving over a large section of country buying eggs and poultry from farmers had printed a small card, which he requested each of his patrons to nail up where they could see it every day. It ran thus: "For eggs only, and lots of them, keep pure leghorns. For early broilers and a good supply of eggs, keep pure Plymouth Rocks. For heavy roasters and a fair supply of eggs, keep pure light brahmas. Keep only one breed and keep that pure. Change males every year." The result was that in two years all of the common mixed chickens disappeared from all the farms on his route and pure breeds took their places, nine-tenths of which were Plymouth Rocks. The change proved profitable to both the buyer and the farmers, because he soon became quite noted as a shipper of the finest and most even lots of fowls that came to the city, and he could afford to pay the best prices for them. I know of one little town in Illinois that has become quite famous for the fine quality of poultry shipped from it. A few years ago an enterprising poultry dealer living there organized a society for the improvement of poultry, and with the assistance of a few live men held a poultry fair in January of each year, at which were offered good prizes for the best specimens and pens of market fowls, and for the hen, pen and flock showing the best egg record. The prizes were worth working for, and competition was active. The result was what one might naturally expect.—The Examiner.

Interesting Farm Notes.

One of the worst tax gatherers is waste.

Clover should always be a prominent crop.

The fertility, not the soil, loses its value.

Produce what your home market demands.

Keep breeding animals thriving but not fat.

There are few soils that will not bear manure.

A mulch prevents sudden thawing and freezing.

Nuts should be eaten as food and not as desert.

Vegetable manures are not a complete fertilizer.

Lime, salt and plaster are auxiliary fertilizers.

Bare soil loses nitrogen; covered soil absorbs it.

It is easier to stop a knothole than to cure a cold.

Mix good corn with the unsound when you feed it.

The microbe of cleanliness is the one to cultivate.

It pays to paint the outside of your meat barrel.

If your soil is poor, don't desert it, but make it rich.

Keep no animal for meat beyond the age of thrift.

Pet animals are often carriers of contagious diseases.

Lowering feed and care soon shows a disastrous result.

Much waste stuff can be economically used for bedding.

Stone walls are enduring, but not always efficacious.

The surest way to become land poor is to buy more acres.

Drainage makes the soil cultivatable both earlier and later.

Two opposing qualities cannot be successfully bred together.

Easily dissolved solid foods are easier to digest than fluids are.

Don't count too much on what stock can pick up foraging around.

A crop of rye, followed by a crop of clover, will improve a poor soil.

Indigestion shows a furred tongue, and good digestion a clean one.

Wheat and potatoes can be grown mainly with commercial fertilizers.

Better put more manure and labor on less ground and grow a large crop.

All foods must be perfectly dissolved before they can nourish the system.

The earth closet is available in every country home and should be found there.

There is more profit in growing an animal than in fattening one already grown.

It is wrong to eat a full meal and then overload the stomach by a tempting desert.

Denmark is talking of adopting a legal national mark for her butter, complaints having been made that butter from other countries is bought as Danish.

The shortest and surest road to profit is through reducing cost rather than through raising the price.

The progressive man is always looking ahead; the non-progressive man is always sighing over the past.

In 1890 we spoiled 25,202,901 bushels of grain, mostly corn, in making 972,578,878 gallons of alcoholic drinks, which cost the consumers over $1,000,000,000.

Peas are highly recommended both as forage and ground feed. Cover the seed with the plow and then sow oats on the furrows, two and one-half bushels of peas to one bushel of oats.

Potato scab is found to be common to the various varieties of beets. Many lots of the common red or yellow table beets found on the markets are more or less affected. This is to be expected when they come from the family garden—a place where potatoes are commonly grown. The disease on sugar beets reaches proportions more extensive than ever noted upon potatoes, often the greater part of the surface being covered.

In your ignorance of effects or by excess, or exposure, you may have unduly drained your system of nerve force and vitality—which is Electricity—and thus caused your weakness or lack of force. This is our plan and treatment.

Dr. Sanden's Electric Belt is no experiment, as we have restored thousands to robust health and vigor, after all other treatments failed, as can be shown by hundreds of cases throughout this State, who would gladly testify, and from many of whom we have strong letters bearing testimony to their recovery after using our Belt.

THE REV. SAMUEL BONES.

The Rev. Samuel Bones was a good missionary
Sent to reform the benighted Fejee,
To teach and to preach and to show by example
How saintly a savage Fejee might be;
He said it was sinful to serve an acquaintance
As a stew or ragout at an afternoon tea;
He taught them that even a pleasant expression
Was not enough dress for a modest Fejee.

But, alack and alas! these degenerate heathen
Somehow didn't reform or convert worth a cent,
And they vulgarly vowed in their coarse Fejee language
That they'd eat Rev. Bones even if it was Lent.

But, when they had cooked him one morning for breakfast,
Then they mourned him and called him the tenderest of men,
And they wept bitter tears after he had been eaten,
And wished him alive—to eat over again.

And the Tum Tum Quartet, with intuitive feeling
And a fine sense of what would have pleased the remains,
Sang a requiem which he in person had taught them
To expressively sing with considerable pains.
They chanted with joy, and that sense of elation,
Which comes from done duty and freedom from sin,
The words of that touching, appropriate anthem:
"Oh, he was a stranger, and we took him in!"

—Harvard Lampoon.

FEENA.

I made her acquaintance in the train, between Munich and Verona. She was traveling with her mother, and they were both in deep mourning for her father had died only a month previously in Berlin. I could not help noticing her, she was so strong a type of American beauty—hair of dull gold, large hazel eyes, a pretty little mouth, and a small, straight nose. Her vivacity, too, was remarkable, and when she laughed her expression was enchanting.

We soon got on speaking terms. The scenery of the Tyrol was not to be viewed in silence. Besides, it was a long journey, and hunger made itself felt. They had a luncheon basket from their hotel, and I had one from mine. She preferred my wine to hers, and used my silver knife to cut her orange with. These trifles go a considerable way when one is abroad. Long before we got to Verona, I knew a good deal about them. Her mother had not minded falling asleep when it grew dark, and this seemed to set the girl talking with more freedom.

Her name was Feena—Feena Stanhope. She was of an old Virginia family, brought up in Paris, and with the ways of a girl of the world.

I do not mind admitting that I lost my heart to her. So, too, did a young Bavarian who was with us. He told me so while we stretched our legs at Innspruck, and I felt inclined to smite him for his confidence.

As I did not care whether I went on that night to Venice or stayed in Verona, the girl's "Oh, do stay" decided me.

We went to the Hotel de Londres, a big old place, with a pretty inner courtyard full of exotics. There, among the plants, we had our little supper together—just some soup, chicken, and cheese, with a flask of Chianti. The waiter behind us looked as if he, too, was in love with Feena, and so I said I thought we could get on very well without him. He took his dismissal with excellent grace.

The Bavarian, by-the-by, had gone on to Venice, not, however, without ascertaining at what hotel the Stanhopes proposed to sojourn. He colored to his hair roots when they asked him, as a matter of form, to favor them with a call. I didn't ask him to call at my hotel to see me.

The next day we three went on to Venice. It was a lovely morning, and the distant white alps against the profound blue of the sky might have sent a poet half crazy with poetic joys.

For my part I didn't take much notice of the scenery. It was not new to me, and I was much better pleased to play the part of traveling valet and companion to my friends. I had already entered heartily into a quarrel with the customs officials at the frontier, on behalf of the contents of one of Feena's trunks. It overjoyed me that Feena and I won our case. The customs officer bowed low and let us pass.

At Venice I could think of nothing but Feena. As I purposed staying here several weeks, I left the Hotel d'Angleterre and took a suite of rooms in a private house, very near to the Hotel de l'Europe, which the Stanhopes patronized. It was delightful. I saw them every day, and either supped, dined or promenaded with them. I flatter myself, whether or not I am still in her memory, Feena will not easily think of the picture galleries and churches of the dear old city without also thinking of me.

Then the gondolas! Ah me! Of course she and I went out in them, generally accompanied by her mother, but now and then—after dinner—alone.

How heavenly it was. She lay on one side of the cusion cabin and I on the other. Thus we were wont to glide over the starlit water, while Giacomo, our man, sang soft Venetian ballads. On two or three occasions we hired a second gondola, with several musicians on board. The whisperings of their music and melodies, with the gentle wash of the waves against the swaying sides of the boat, was almost too sweet.

At such times I neede no lamp except Feena's eyes. How large and bright they were, and how full of merry talk she was!

We would have gone to the theaters also, but for the fact that they were still in mourning for Mr. Stanhope. Yet, ecstatic though many of my Venetian hours thus spent were, I was not altogether happy.

There was the young Bavarian, in the first place. I saw a good deal more of him than I wished to see—at the Hotel de l'Europe. Unfortunately, he talked English excellently—thanks to his university education. He was also amusing and won Mrs. Stanhope with his stories. But he did not win Feena, who laughed at him with me.

I have an idea now, however, that it is possible Feena laughed at me when she was with him. She was not bad at the core, but she was certainly made as most pretty girls are made.

Well, the Stanhopes were only to be in Venice 10 days.

It was hideous to me to think of remaining when they had gone. But I had taken my rooms by solemn agreement for a month. Besides I had work to do, and much more to see. So one morning I had the melancholy privilege of helping them both into the train for Florence, and bidding them a doleful and yet not altogether broken-hearted adieu. I, too, had by then settled to be in Florence a month later.

I put newspers, and fruit, and iced wine into their "coupe," shook hands tenderly, was enraptured at the slight but unmistakable pressure of Feena's fingers against mine, and then stood bareheaded and miserable while the train sneaked away as if it were ashamed of itself for thus bereaving me.

After this I saw more of the Bavarian. He told me that he thought Feena an arrant flirt, and I told him that he did not know enough about Anglo-Saxon girls to give an opinion very well. Especially we quarrelled when he informed me he had seen Feena distinctly "making eyes"—he used the odious phrase in English—at the "bersagliere" officers in the Piazza San Marco. But in the end we were on very fair terms of intimacy until he, too, left Venice. He was going to take the baths somewhere. He got to laugh latterly when he mentioned Feena. He did not suppose he should ever see her again, much as he was, he avowed, enamored of her. It would take a great deal, he said, to make him marry her, even if she were padded with thousand dollar bills. For pastime she was admirable, but matrimony is diffrent.

This dissolved our intimacy altogether. I said farewell to Maximilian von Marlin, as he was called, without even a pretence of regret.

The next month passed with leaden slowness. I met an English major of Huzzars, and together we killed some of the moments. But even now I think of those Venetian days as among the most trying of my experience, yet the weather was fine, the theaters were brightened with brilliant companies, and one festival succeeded another in the fair old city of canals.

At length the day of release came. I wired to Florence to make sure I should be received in the "pension" to which the Stanhopes had gone, and set off in high spirits.

Never did the vineyards of beautiful Italy seem to be more lovely than on this day. Bologna, for once, did not tempt me to stop and spend a few hours with a friend whose acquaintance I had made in travelling very much out of the beaten track in the east of Europe some years ago. I was impatient with our slow crossing of the Apennines, and was only content when at last we ran with a scream into the station of Florence.

I found Feena more fascinating than before. She was a little cold at first, and her mother gave me much the kinder greeting. But her frigidity soon left her, and we made a heap of plans about the galleries and the neighborhood.

The "pension" was a luxurious building on Lung's Arno. I had a bedroom upholstered in yellow silk, and the rest of the house was in keeping with this. From the large drawing room two massive marble balconies connected with the outer air, and looked upon the flashing river and the gay heights of San Miniato beyond.

Oh, those balconies! I never find myself in Florence now but I look at them and wonder at the transitoriness of our human passions. A most unnecessary exertion, to be sure, considering how brief a time our bodies, which are the cupboard of these passions, even themselves endure!

Feena had been introduced to the best "modiste" in Florence, which says much. She was more alluring than ever. The contrast between her golden hair and hazel eyes and the jetty black of her gowns was somehow greatly emphasized. I never tired of looking at her. Indeed, I had plenty of opportunity, for did I not sit next to her daily at the dinner table, and opposite her in the carriage perhaps twice a day on an average?

She was the talk of the "pension." As usual, there were a number of elderly ladies in the house, and they seemed to think Feena was too beautiful to be quite proper. Heaven only knows how they got such a twist in their imbecile old wits. They peered at us over their soup, with their eyes wide open, and were wont to whisper solemnly, as if they had something dreadful to say about her.

But in the drawing room the girl was able to win even their tough old hearts, parchmented upon a daily diet of gossip and uncharitable conjecture. There were some children among the "pensionnaires," and to see Feena with them was a sight to make a stone image sigh with admiration.

For all that, she was of so volatile a nature that she would suddenly break from the midst of an admiring circle at such a time, and accost me with a direct invitation to go out on to the balcony with her.

I was on that balcony much, too much for my peace of mind. Florentine nights are of themseives a love lesson. Feena was another. And the tinkle, tinkle of the mandolins in the street beneath us, with their sweet, familiar airs, and the after appeal for "a soldi, lady fair," was yet an additional cause likely to convince me that unless I could get Feena for a wife, my subsequent existence would not be worth a snap of finger and thumb.

Several times under the starlight, and with the river at our feet reflecting the hundreds of lamps on both banks of the stream, it was on my lips to say: "Feena mia, will you be mine for life?"

But there was always something in the way; either the memory of her mother's words that her daughter must marry a rich man, or the thought that I was not worthy of so radiant, so queenly a creature, or the paralyzing fancy that Feena did not really love me.

She seemed to have a hypnotismal knowledge when these ambitions were strongest within me; and though she might the moment before have called me "Carlo mio," with a glorious glance, she could, in the very nick of time to prevent the proposal, turn aside for some feigned purpose, or speak to one or other of the young men who were also her victims, but who were content to sigh toward her at a distance.

This fool's paradise lasted a month. For a few days in the time Feena was ill—sufficiently so to be confined to her room, though not to be kept in bed. During her indisposition I spent an anxious half-hour daily in the flower market by the via Tornabuoni, and my boquets to her cost more money than I could well afford. But I considered myself fully recompensed in being allowed to present them to her in person. I do not think I shall soon forget her appearance as an invalid, robed in a white silk gown, with swansdown at the neck. She was always then particularly bewitching. I suppose my worst nights were those while she was poorly. I was cruelly tormented by the thought what I should do.

But the girl herself was all this time playing her own part.

It came out, one day, when, as I was descending the "pension" stairs, I caught the hall servant in low colloquy with an elegantly dressed young man of the kind I had come to detest. He was the marchese, something or other—at least, his visiting card said so—and the packet of papers he was urging the servant to take to the Signora Stanhope—Feena's mamma—were—what do you think? The family credentials, documents, etc., upon the strength of which, plus his title, he hoped to be permitted to pay his respects to the Signorina Feena!

All this came out by degrees. Mrs. Stanhope made a confident of me. I could have wished she had not, and yet I should have been very angry if the matter had not come to my ears.

From that day forward Feena was less the old Feena than a new Feena, in whom I could not help seeing a lamentable amount of commonplace, vulgar ambition.

She was tender enough to me when I was with her; but she did not disguise from me that she was caught by the tinsel of the marchese's title and family documents. His estate in Calabria was said to be a surprising number of hectares in extent. I don't know how much a hectare means in English acreage, nor do I wish to know; but I couldn't help reminding Feena that she knew very little about her precious marchese, except that he was under five feet six inches in height, with a strut like an ill-bred factory girl's. She would laugh at my strictures, and acknowledge their truth. All the same I saw she meant to dazzle her American aunts and uncles and cousins by becoming a marchioness as soon as possible.

The closer the matter came to completion, the more Mrs. Stanhope seemed to rely upon me. Would I go into Calabria, and make sure of the truth of the young gentleman's words? She asked me this one day. I am afraid I was almost rude in reply. I expressed my willingness to kick the gentleman out of the "pension" the next time I found him there; but as for interesting myself thus far in his suit, it was out of the question.

Be it understood that ere this I had asked Feena to be my wife, and had failed in my petition. It was nothing in consolation that she said she liked me more than she liked any other man, and said she would have married me gladly if I had $10,000 or $12,000 a year. She confessed too, though I had almost anticipated the confession, that she meant not to let her heart interfere with her life schemes. She proposed to play a great part in the world; money and rank were essential to her ambitions.

On this understanding I left Florence one hot day. She would not see me to say "good-by," but wrote me a "billet doux" at 1 o'clock on the night previous, in which she said more than she ought to have said, considering that she was to marry the marchese.

I say nothing about the immense interest our "pensionnaires" took in the affair. It was done in so open a manner that they could hardly believe in it. They fancied that the Stanhopes and I were three shrewd adventurers, beneath whose united plots the wretched little Italian was to be ground to powder—or at least his estates were.

It would have amused me at another time to enjoy the fruits of this misconception. But, as it was, naturally I did not like it; and, so I left Florence.

Mrs. Stanhope saw me off at the station. She, poor woman, was almost as much a sufferer as myself at the shrine of her daughter's coquetry. She did not believe in the marchese, and she did not trust the Italian nature.

"Now that you are going," she said to me, "I shall feel lonely, indeed. Goodness knows what will happen. Feena is so self-willed. But you shall hear from me."

Well, for two months I knocked about in Sicily, and in that time almost drove Feena out of my thoughts.

In June I returned to England, found letters from both the Stanhopes, and learned that the marriage would take place in San Francisco in September. In due course I received a grand emblazoned and very odoriferous sheet of paper, inviting me to be present at the wedding..

I did not think it worth while to cross the Atlantic in the autumn, and then the continent, for the satisfaction of seeing how lovely Feena looked as a bride. It was quite enough that I coerced myself enough to write a brief note wishing her every happiness. I considered that page of my life to be closed forever. But was not. There is this to be said of life, that it need never be oppressively dull. Of course, if you fix yourself in a country village, and foreswear metropolitan brightness and stir, it can hardly fail to be dull. But then, unless you are obliged to do so, why do it?

The next spring, as usual, found me abroad, gradually dropping from Dresden to the south of Italy. By May I was in Naples. I was happy enough in my own way. Feena did not enter my head one day in seven, and then only for an instant. Perhaps I wondered how she would look as a matron. It was not more than this.

But one morning I was glancing at the ices in the famous confectioner's shop at the beginning of the Toledo, and meditating whether they were as palatable as they looked, when I heard some one call my name.

I turned round in the twinkle of an eye. I should have known that voice among a million.

Yes, it was Feena; somewhat altered, but still the Feena whom I remembered as the absorbing complement of Venice and Florence.

She was stouter, more majestic, and there was more strength in her face; but she was still so beautiful that even while we were speaking the first words, I remarked how nearly every man turned round as he passed her.

"And the marchese?" I asked, as indifferently as I could.

"Oh, I don't know where he is—nor care," she replied, with a pout of those pretty lips of hers.

"Good heavens!"

We entered the ice shop where we trifled with the sweet stuff she told me something of her history. Married in September, she had soon begun to find out that the gentleman was not all he ought to be. In Paris he had used threats to get money from her—the threats had ended in a blow, whereupon Feena had dramatically roused the hotel upon the marchese, and a scandal was the consequence. It got into the Paris papers and then the American.

But worse was to follow.

From Paris they traveled down to Callabria—to the immeasurable estate which from time immemorial (so the marchese said) had been in the hands of his family.

Here, for six or seven dreadful weeks Feena had endured his society and that of a fat, plebeian dame who said she was his aunt, alone in a ramshackle house built in an oak forest of the Apennines.

"Ennui" was too mild a word to express her state of mind. It appeared, too, that she was there not to enjoy a continuance of the honeymoon happiness (though there was not much of that, I judge), but the better to be constrained to give up her money to her husband.

There was no American consul for her to appeal to—no society of any kind except the vulgar aunt and two or three peasants, and the howling of the wind in the trees of the elevated forest.

Then, and not till then, Feena began to suspect that her humilation was to be extreme. She questioned her husband's marquisship, and she was right. It transpired that the fellow was merely a clever rogue, absolutely untitled, without even an olive courtship. One hundred years ago a multitude of Italians got the title of count as a reward for planting so much of their land in olives, and that from first to last she was victimized.

I can fancy the poor girl had a bad time when she realized this. She was hot-tempered, and she did not scruple to menace the sham marchese with the vengeance of the United States. This annoyed him, and he beat her more than once, and with a stout orange stick.

Feena would not stand this, and so one evening, having bribed a Calabrian peasant to guide her, she evaded the family castle, and, after divers hardships, reached Cosenza, and thence got to Naples.

She had been in Naples a month, when she saw me at a shop window. For her reputation's sake she had gone into a convent until the arrival of her motehr from America. She was, she said, bored to death, but still she was able to laugh and to feel tolerably happy in spite of what she had undergone.

I could hardly believe my ears as I listened to her. It seemed so monstrous. That this pretty girl (she was but just of age) should have had her life wrecked in such a way was almost incredible.

Yet even while I looked at her I had an inkling why she was so little really depressed. Her heart had never been interested in the business. It had been a sort of commercial investment. True, it had turned out sadly amiss; but she was young, and she had the American spirit of perseverence which urged her not to mind if her first effort had failed.

"I have had a good square talk about it with the American consul ("American," she said, but all speech was melodious on her tongue), "and he thinks I can get a divorce in the Italian courts."

She said this quite elatedly.

"And afterward?" I ventured to ask.

"Oh, who can tell? But, say, isn't Naples enchanting? I'm hoping to hear mamma is at Liverpool any day, and once she comes we'll have a rare nice time again. You'll be here for weeks, won't you?"

I said it was exceedingly likely.

"My! How glad mamma will be!"

"And you, Feena?"

"Why, certainly. But now I mustn't stay any longer. The lady outside in the car is the superior of the convent—don't know what she'll think about all this, but she knows the history of that brute. Anyhow, give me your address, and we'll see plenty of each other when mamma comes."

Then we parted, and I went off to my hotel with a good deal to think about. The superior of the convent had looked rather hard at me, I fancied.

Well, in due time Mrs. Stanhope reached Naples. Feena was jubilant over her release from the monastic life, which could have suited no one less. They went straightway to the "Grand Hotel," and took a lovely room, with a double balcony, overlooking the bay. This done, Mrs. Stanhope put herself into communication with the consul and a certain Neapolitan nobleman who had interested himself in Feena's case, and whose influence at court was considerable.

Yes, it was decided to bring an action for divorce. There were divers pleas on behalf of it, and cruelty was but one of them. It was confidently hoped that the king would take the part of Feena, and, after the decree, even allow her to keep the title of marchesa, which she had acquired so expensively, and for so short a time.

No sooner did she realize that this was possible, than the girl renewed her ancient ways. She seemed never to go out without making a conquest. There were several noblemen in the hotel, and these were soon all on her list of admirers. They placed their carriages at her disposal, and professed themselves enchanted to be allowed to drive her and Mrs. Stanhope to Posilipo, or anywhere else.

It was futile to argue with the girl.

"No, no," she said, when I had got impatient with her one day. "That fellow down in Calabria way has cheated me out of a good deal of fun, and I guess I'll make up for it."

Even the argument that she was injuring her prospects of a divorce did not sufficiently frighten her.

"I believe I'm becoming reckless," she whispered to me one evening in the villa gardens, during the fashionable stroll before dinner.

Indeed, I, too, had come to that opinion then. The way she pressed my arm at intervals when she wished to be kind, made me see that the old Feena was gone for ever.

Even the consul interposed, with sedate headshakings.

"What can I do, though?" asked poor Mrs. Stanhope. "She says she's a married woman, and means to do as she pleases. I'ts not a bit of use trying to hold her in."

Often, after dinner, when I called at the hotel, I found the girl still at the dinner-table, holding forth in a wild manner to the young gentlemen who had dined at the table d'hote on purpose to see her. Her mother would interpose with a "Now, Feena, come upstairs, dear;" but her daughter did not heed these invitations. My appearance, more than aught else, seemed to draw her back to her senses. With a lovely bow, she would rise and leave the room.

Still later, under the starlight, and the mild, sweet air of Naples, I was allowed to smoke my cigar on their balcony. Then I used to think of our evenings in Florence, a year ago; for Feena would insist on coming into the open air with a chair, and sitting with her hair down for the moon to shine upon. How her eyes would gleam in the half shadow, to be sure! There was somehting almost terrifying in their splendor.

It might chance that the Neapolitan ballad singers would come round at such a time. Nothing then would suit Feena's turn, but she must fling a lira or two to them, and keep them strumming sentimental airs by the half-hour—she and I on the balcony, and a crowd of the Neapolitan youth below! It was not altogether good form, and in a girl suing for a divorce it was more than indiscreet.

Well, I must hurry to the end—the sad end.

The divorce suit came on and failed. The king had heard much of Feena and her beauty, had seen her at a reception, and got an exagerated idea of her conduct. It was just what was sure to happen. But it came as a bad blow to both Mrs. Stanhope and myself.

I don't think it affected Feena very much. She pretended to laugh and make light of it.

"Let him come and take me if he dare," she said, alluding to her husband, the false Marchese.

But all the while it was plain she was drifting nearer and nearer to the goal which it is ruin for any woman to touch.

She was more and more with her noble acquaintances of Naples; and there were times when—so her mother told me—she insisted on being alone with them in these drives.

"Why not take her away?" I asked.

"Because she has said she will not go," was the dolorous reply. "She has been her own bane, poor girl, and I don't know what to do."

It was about a week after this that one day I received a note from Mrs. Stanhope, asking me to come round to the hotel immediately.

I did so, to find that Feena had gone off in the yacht of a young count, who had been one of her most persistent followers.

This is the last, hitherto, that I have heard of Feena. I could not stay longer in Naples. Mrs. Stanhope promised to give me intelligence of what transpired after this crushing step, but I have not heard from her either. This, to me, implies the worst possible.

Some day I may see her again, but I may sincerely say that I hope not. I do not care to think what she would look like now.

And yet, from the first, she was more sinned against than sinning.—All the Year Round.
